Prologue

Curtain again. Well, well! Here's thanks to you.
For lo! It rises on the self-same boards
It's risen on these six years; the paste-board swords,
Profs, gilded youth, tableaux, and maidens too,
All these you've seen before:—acted anew,
The same old comedy. The same old words,
Gestures in air, and tunes, and supes, and lords
Crave your applause—in annual review.

They thank you and they greet you, and they know
They can repay you, even amuse you. For
They are real actors on their little stage,
And enter, hand on heart, lined up in row,
Kissing their fingers to you, auditor.—
Make way, then! Bow the prologue off the page.

THE Managing Editors desire to express their appreciation of the assistance given by the members of the Editorial Board. This issue of THE CAP AND GOWN inaugurates a new system of selection of editors, according to which appointments are not made, as formerly, by the Managing Editors, but by the student societies themselves. The Managing Editors adopted this method of selection in the hope of securing the ablest assistants possible, as well as in the desire to make the interests of the book the interests of the student body. They have realized their hope to such an extent that it has been necessary for them merely to direct the work of compilation and to edit the book as collated by the chairmen of the various committees. The CAP AND GOWN of Nineteen Hundred Two is thus the product of the student body of the University of Chicago.

This is the first issue of the CAP AND GOWN in which there appears no professional artistic- or literary-work. The Managing Editors therefore cordially thank those artists and authors of the campus who have contributed to these features; also those who have aided by suggestion and whose names do not appear on either the Staff of Artists or Board of Editors; and those connected with the Faculty of the University who have placed records at the command of the editors.

In using maroon as a cover for the CAP AND GOWN of Nineteen Hundred Two, the Managing Editors intend to set that color as the conventional cover for this and subsequent issues.

THE OLD UNIVERSITY OF CHICAGO

The Decennial

The Founding of the University

IN 1855 Stephen Arnold Douglas founded the first university established in Chicago. For a campus he gave ten acres of land, bounded by College Place, University Place, Cottage Grove Avenue and Rhodes Avenue; and here in 1857 the University of Chicago opened its doors. Rev. John C. Burroughs was the first president. The financial history of the institution, always troubled, came to an end in 1886 when the property was seized by an insurance company under foreclosure proceedings. At a meeting of Baptist ministers in Chicago Dr. George W. Northrup, President of the Baptist Union Theological Seminary, declared in favor of abandoning the old university and establishing a new one; and Dr. T. W. Goodspeed spoke for a new charter, a new board of trustees, and a site south of the city limits. For two years there was much conferring and consulting; then in the fall of 1888 Mr. John D. Rockefeller advised with Dr. William R. Harper of Yale concerning Chicago as a possible place for a college, and told Dr. Harper and Dr. Goodspeed that he was willing to give several hundred thousand dollars for an institution in Chicago. In December, 1888, Dr. Harper for Mr. Rockefeller and Rev. Fred. T. Gates, Secretary of the American Baptist Education Society, in behalf of interested Chicagoans, laid the matter before the Board of the Society; and this society unanimously voted for the establishment of a thoroughly equipped institution in Chicago. In May, 1889, the Board passed resolutions which formed the basis for the organization of the University. Immediately the Secretary, Mr. Gates, read a pledge from Mr. Rockefeller for $6000,000, provided that $400,000 be subscribed before June 1, 1890, for buildings and grounds; $402,083 were raised. Mr. Marshall Field gave the north half of the three blocks lying between Fifty-sixth and Fifty-ninth Streets, Ellis and Greenwood Avenues; the south half was bought by the Board from Mr. Field.

Mr. John D. Rockefeller, Mr. E. Nelson Blake, Mr. Marshall Field, Mr. Fred. T. Gates, Mr. Francis E. Hinckley, and Dr. Thomas W. Goodspeed secured, under date of September 10, 1890, a charter for "The University of Chicago." In order to avoid complications, the Board of Trustees of the institution founded by Douglas authorized the new college to use the title, "The University of Chicago," and formally changed the name of the first university to "The Old University of Chicago;" at the same time these trustees directed that the books and records of the the "Old University" be turned over to the new, thus facilitating the relations of the alumni of the two colleges and securing preservation of the records of degrees conferred.

At the meeting September 18, the new Board of Trustees received a pledge for one million dollars from Mr. Rockefeller—a gift which assured a graduate school, a divinity school, and an academy, to supplement the colleges already planned. On this day, too, the trustees enthusiastically elected Professor William Rainey Harper of Yale to the presidency.

By April 1, 1891, Dr. Harper had accepted the proffered position, and the Baptist Seminary at Morgan Park was united with the university as its divinity school. The growth of the institution was assured; a committee was authorized to buy more ground for a campus; after competition, Mr. Henry Ives Cobb was selected as architect; and three buildings were ordered to be built.

Professor Frank Frost Abbott of Yale received the first appointment to a position on a faculty; he was made University Examiner and Associate Professor of Latin, July 1, 1891.

The following months were filled with events; the Ogden estate gave something more than half a million for a Graduate School of Science; in Berlin President Harper secured the large "Calvary Library;" the faculties were organized; ground for the first building was broken November 26, 1891; Mr. Sidney Kent donated a building to be devoted to chemistry; Mr. Rockefeller pledged a second million dollars; within ninety days after Mr. Fields' donation of $100,000, one million dollars were pledged by Chicagoans. Mr. George C. Walker presented a museum; Mr. Silas B. Cobb gave a recitation building; Mr. Ryerson subscribed for a laboratory; Mrs. Elizabeth Kelly, Mrs. Nancy Foster, Mrs. Beecher, Mrs. Snell, each gave a dormitory; and on the eighty-ninth day the effort to raise the million dollars was dramatically concluded in the meeting of the Board of Trustees when a gift was announced from the vice-president of the Board. On October 1, 1892, the University opened its doors to students.

The Decennial Celebration

BECAUSE the University of Chicago began its academic existence in 1891 with the appointment of the first officers of instruction, in June 1901, the university celebrated the completion of the first ten years of its life. For this celebration, five days, June 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, were set apart; and all five days were filled, except for a few minutes available before breakfast, with suitable exercises, in the arrangement of which, as Professor Vincent asserts, the committee was guided by the principle: "When in doubt, lay a corner stone." The exercises were for the most part held in the open air, chiefly in a tent pitched in the hollow north of Haskell and in a huge tent in the center of the campus. Because of the outdoor nature of the ceremonies the success of the celebration was largely aided by the delightful weather which prevailed during the five days; the only rain that fell disturbed for a very few minutes the candidates for degrees who were sitting under the hole at the center pole of the convocation tent.

Junior College Day began with the Inter-fraternity and Inter-house Athletic meets on Marshall Field. Phi Delta Theta won the former and Washington House the latter. At 12:30 the members of the Junior College gathered about the steps of Walker to see planted the ivy brought from the Poet's Walk at Oxford. Mr. Thomas J. Hair, the chairman of the day presided. Miss Kate Wilson recited the Ivy Poem; Miss Edna Robinson delivered the spade to Mr. Clifford W. Gaylord; and Mr. Claude C. Nuckols concluded the ivy exercises with the Ivy Oration. At 2 o'clock in Rosalie Hall, the Dramatic Club, under the direction of Mr. Stanley Davies, presented "A Night Off," with much credit to themselves and to the University. The base-ball team, at 4 o'clock, added to the Decennial joys by defeating Wisconsin on Marshall Field. In the evening the performance of "As You Like It," was given in the tent in the Graduate Quadrangle and at 9 o'clock the Junior Promenade was held at the Chicago Beach Hotel. Mr. Platt M. Conrad was the chairman of the Promenade.

Saturday morning about 7 o'clock Mr. and Mrs. Rockefeller arriving at the president's house were greeted (unofficially) by a double line of girls from the halls who sang, cheered, yelled, and waved their handkerchiefs. At 9:30 the Chicago branch of the Alumni had breakfast at the Quadrangle Club. Miss Blanche Swingley was toast-mistress and the speakers were Miss Estelle Luttrell '96, Miss Alice Winston '98, Miss Julia Dumke '98, Mrs. Alice Freeman Palmer, Mrs. Leila F. Mallory and Miss Marion Fairman '01. At 11:15 the procession of faculties, trustees, guests, councilors, band, and marshals escorted the Founder and the President to the site of the press building. Here, after the President's introductory statement and the recital by Dr. Goodspeed of the list of articles deposited in the copper box, the corner-stone was set by Mr. Newman Miller, the Director of the University Press. Professor Laughlin then in the corner-stone address spoke of the educational and cultural value of printing. The procession moved to where Hitchcock Hall was being erected. Mrs. Hitchcock laid the corner-stone. Professor Shorey delivered the address, paying an eloquent and affecting tribute to his father's college chum, Charles Hitchcock, and to the woman who gave the building as an expression of her love for her husband and for the under-graduate men of the University. The assembly proceeded to Nancy Foster Hall where Mr. George E. Adams, in behalf of Mrs. Foster presented the keys of the completed building to the President. Mrs. Alice Freeman Palmer, the University's first Dean of Women, then delivered the dedicatory address. After these exercises, the University's guests crowded into Foster for luncheon. At 1:30 in Cobb Hall the business meeting of the Alumni Association was held. Professor Henderson in the absence of President Buzzell welcomed the class of '01 into the organization; Mr. Owen E. Hotle responded for his class. At 2:30 Class Day exercises were held at the Stone Bench. After the singing of Chicago songs and of the class song, Mr. Curtis R. Manning read the history and Miss Nellie Williams handed down the Cap and Gown to Miss Edna L. Stevens of '02. Mr. Bertram G. Nelson in accepting the care of the Senior Bench, spoke for '02. The president of the class, Mr. Arthur E. Bestor, presented to the University a tablet to the memory of Stephen A. Douglas, the founder of the Old University of Chicago. For the University, Mr. Franklin MacVeagh replied. These exercises concluded with more songs and yells, including the taunts of the Juniors who had lowered the Senior flag from the staff on the tower of Ryerson. At 3:30 the classes of '66, '71, '76, '81, '86 and '96 held reunions in Cobb. The band at 4 o'clock, gave another concert on Marshall Field while the team defeated Northwestern. The Alumni Association held its banquet at the Quadrangle Club. Between courses the president, Mr. Charles Sumner Pike '96, Miss Ruth Vail '01, Mr. Theodore G. Soares '94, G., responded to toasts. By the time the last course was served the hour for the second performance of "As You Like It" had arrived.

Sunday morning at a bible service the President, Professor Moulton, and Professor Mathews discussed "Sacred Wisdom." The President delivered the address at the Baccalaureate Service. In the afternoon the Decennial Vespers were held in the convocation tent. Addresses were made by the Reverend Marcus Dods, D.D., of Edinburgh, the Reverend Elisha Benjamin Andrews, D.D., LL.D., of Nebraska, the Reverend Professor Emil G. Hirsch, Ph.D., and the Reverend Professor Eri B. Hulbert, D.D. The University band and a decennial chorus under Mr. Lester Bartlett Jones furnished music. Miss Jane Addams and the Reverend Ernest M. Stires addressed the union meeting of the Y. M. C. A. and Y. W. C. A., in the evening.

Monday was Educational Day. The annual address before Phi Beta Kappa was delivered by President Benjamin Ide Wheeler of the University of California. At 10:30 Chancellor E. Benjamin Andrews of the University of Nebraska, President George E. MacLean of the State University of Iowa, President Charles F. Thwing of Western Reserve University and Professor Albion W. Small addressed an educational conference concerning "College and University Problems." At noon Professor Nicholas Murray Butler of Columbia, delivered in Kent the address at the official opening of the School of Education. The meeting adjourned to Scammon Court where the President and Director Francis Wayland Parker made statements and soil was turned for the new buildings. In the afternoon various conferences were held at which these men spoke: Professor Jacob Henry Van t'Hoff of Berlin, Director Charles Doolittle Walcott of the United States Geological Survey, Professor Basil L. Gildersleeve of Johns Hopkins, Professor George Lyman Kittredge of Harvard, Reverend Marcus Dods of Edinburgh, Reverend William Newton Clarke of Colgate, His Excellency, M. Jules Cambon, French ambassador. At 4 o'clock the base-ball team meet defeat at the hands of the Michigan team. After the game the President gave a dinner to official guests at the Quadrangle Club. In the evening the weather was perfect for the brilliant convocation reception. Nearly all of the two thousand windows facing the campus were illuminated; the convocation tent was fairly bursting with light. From a band-stand near Haskell, the band rendered a concert program which won it great praise as a musical organization; inside of the tent an elegant assemblage of more than three thousand people crowded up among the palms to the platform where stood the receiving party: the president, Mr. and Mrs. Rockefeller, Mr. and Mrs. Ryerson, and Dean Judson.

The final day of the celebration opened with the Graduate Matutinal. At 9:30 the faculties, trustees, councilors, marshals, Dr. D. K. Pearsons, Mr. Rockefeller and other guests, marched to the Club House corner. From a platform erected above the foundation of the tower, the President announced that the Commons had been provided by a Chicago business man, that Mr. John J. Mitchell was the donor of the Tower, that the money for the Club House had been given by the estate of Joseph Reynolds, and that Leon Mandel presented the Assembly Hall. The Commons corner-stone was set by Mr. James Milton Sheldon and the address was delivered by Professor Albion W. Small. That of the Tower was laid by Mr. Joseph Chalmers Hazen; and Professor Richard Green Moulton gave the address. Mr. David Allan Robertson was the layer of the Students' Club House corner-stone and at this ceremony Professor George Edgar Vincent delivered the address. At Leon Mandel Assembly Hall, Rabbi Emil G. Hirsch delivered the address after Mr. Henry Magee Adkinson had set the stone. Immediately after these exercises the procession to the convocation tent was formed. Decennial addresses were made by: President Martin A. Ryerson for the Board of Trustees, Professor Frank F. Abbott, in behalf of the Faculties, Mr. Arthur E. Bestor for the Students and Alumni, Mr. George E. Adams for the city of Chicago. President Harper introduced the founder of the University. When Mr. Rockefeller arose to speak the whole audience arose in a body and remained standing until he reached the speaker's desk. The founder congratulated the University on its president, its board of trustees, its faculties; he gave some sensible advice to the students, he closed with praise for Chicago, "Long may she live to foster and develop this sturdy representative of her enterprise and public spirit." After the Convocation the Congregation dinner was held in the "As You Like It" tent. Professor Chamberlain was toast-master. Mr. Rockefeller in a speech kindly and wittily declared that he did not regard the University as the New Englander regarded a burying ground; a place where those who were in couldn't get out, and those who were out didn't want to get in, for he was in it and didn't want to get out. In closing he proposed three cheers for Andrew Carnegie, "Who has contributed more to education and other good causes in America than any other man." The cheers were given heartily; but with boomerang effect they returned to John D. Rockefeller. When the President arose to speak, the founder led the audience in arising to cheer him. President Harper briefly reminded the University of the share Mrs. Rockefeller had in the founding of the University and the share she had in gratitude for the founding of the institution. Then drawing out his watch, the President declared that it was three minutes past five, that the summer quarter had already begun, that the Decennial Celebration was of the past.

University Extension

AMONG those features which are distinctive and characteristic of the University of Chicago as contrasted with many older institutions none has been more prominent from the beginning than the work of the University Extension Division. In one of its earliest circulars the university announced the establishment of this as one of the five co-ordinate divisions of the university. As a general explanation of the work which it was entering upon, the following announcement was made: "University Extension seeks to bring a liberal education within reach of those who for any reason cannot pursue studies in residence. It aims to meet the wants not only of those who have never pursued college and university courses, but also of those who having completed such courses desire to review them and to avail themselves of the results of recent research. By encouraging regular reading and study, it aims to widen the intelligence and enlarge the sympathies, thereby promoting the better employment, as well as enjoyment of leisure."

The various departments of the University Extension Division as originally organized were: 1. Lecture-study; 2. Class-study; 3. Correspondence-study; 4. Examination; 5. Library and publication; 6. District organization and training.

The Class-study Department, the purpose of which was the conduct of systematic courses of instruction in college and university subjects in Chicago, and points more or less distant, met the wants of hundreds of students who could not devote their full time to resident work. It gradually assumed tangible form, until in 1898 it was organized into the Teachers' College (now University College), with headquarters in the Fine Arts Building.

Through the Lecture-study Department courses of systematic, educational, lecture-studies are given in communities where a sufficient degree of local co-operation can be secured. By the use of syllabi, supplementary classes, and traveling libraries, the work assumes an importance vastly greater to the student than any miscellaneous courses however excellent the individual lectures may be. The scope of this work has gradually widened, until now there is scarcely a populous community within a radius of 300 miles of Chicago that is not supplied sometime during the year with a course of at least six lecture-studies from the University of Chicago. The year just closing is the most successful in the history of the department. The number of courses given exceeds that of any previous year by more than 25 per cent.

Individuals desiring to pursue their studies under the direction of the university instructors can do so through the Correspondence-study Department. The work of this department is so carefully conducted that almost without exception both students and instructors claim that this method of instruction secures more exact and tangible results than does regular class-room work. During the present year over 1,250 students have been pursuing correspondence courses of study.

The University Senate.

THE University Senate consists of the President, the University Recorder, the Professors who are heads of Departments of Instruction (twenty-three in all), the University Librarian (office vacant at present), the Director of the University Extension Division, the Director of the School of Education and three members of the Faculties, elected by the Congregation.

The Senate, thus constituted with about thirty members, holds stated meetings monthly, or oftener, to consider general questions relating to the educational work and policy of the University. The actions of Faculties and University Boards upon such questions are subject to revision or reversal by the Senate.

The University Council.

THE University Council consists of the President, the Chaplain, the Recorder, the Registrar, the Deans of all Schools, Colleges and Academies (seventeen in all), the Director of the University Extension Division, the Director of the University Libraries, Laboratories and Museums, the Director of Physical Culture, the Director of the University Press, the Director and Dean of Affiliations, the Director of Co-operating Work, the Principals or Deans of Affiliated Institutions (at present twenty-one), and three members of the Faculties, elected by the Congregation.

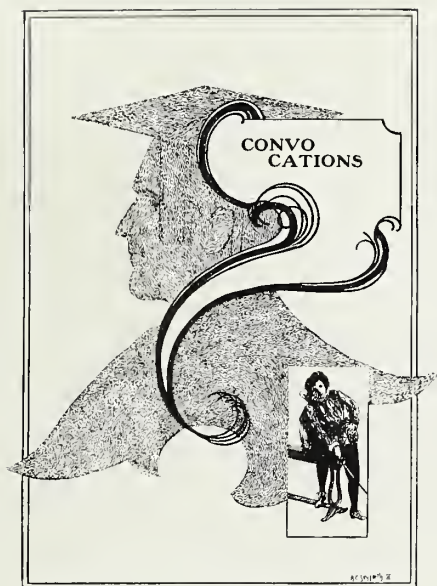

The Council holds stated meetings monthly, to consider questions relating to the general administration of the University. All actions of the Faculties and University Boards upon administrative questions are subject to revision and reversal by this body of fifty-two members.

The University Congregation.

THE University Congregation consists of: Officers of Administration and Instruction of the rank of Instructor and above; Doctors of Philosophy of the University of Chicago; Bachelors of Divinity, of the University of Chicago, of three years' standing; Masters of Arts, Philosophy and Science of the University of Chicago, of five years' standing; Bachelors of Arts, Philosophy and Science of the University of Chicago, of ten years' standing,—under the following conditions, viz.: Not more than five from the Bachelors of Divinity, and not more than five from the Masters of Arts, Philosophy and Science, and not more than ten from the Bachelors of Arts, Philosophy and Science, can be elected yearly for a term of ten years by their respective alumni associations,—each association having, however, power to fill vacancies as they occur; Officers of Affiliated Colleges when elected by the Congregation, and such others as may be recommended by the Senate and elected by the Congregation to honorary membership, provided that not more than five honorary members may be elected yearly. At present the membership of the Congregation is slightly over five hundred.

The Congregation holds regular quarterly meetings in connection with the Convocation exercises, to consider subjects referred to it, and to make recommendations to the Governing Bodies of the University. At all meetings of the Congregation, the full scholastic dress is worn. The Congregation Dinner takes place in connection with each quarterly meeting.

If the Congregation formally disapproves a regulation enacted by any Faculty of the University, it is the duty of such Faculty within four weeks to reconsider its action and report through the Senate or the Council to the Congregation at its next meeting. The Congregation recommends to the Board of Trustees, the Convocation Orator and conducts the celebration of Founder's Day. At the July meeting, the members of the Congregation who are, (a) Doctors of Philosophy and Masters of Arts, Philosophy, and Science of the University; (b) Bachelors of Divinity of the University; (c) Bachelors of Arts, Philosophy, and Science of the University; each elect from the permanent officers of the University, one member of the Senate and one member of the Council. The members of the Senate and Council, so elected hold office for one year and represent in these bodies the Graduate, Divinity and Collegiate Alumni respectively.

STUDENT

ORGANIZATIONS.

AGAZZOLI

THE office of University Marshal was instituted in 1893 with the purpose of taking charge of the University Convocations.

At first the Marshal's duties were largely those of the University Usher whom he superseded, but later as student affairs in the University began to take form, there were added to his duties the responsibilities of organizing and directing the various student celebrations and mass meetings. This was a natural development, because the Marshals were prominent in student affairs, in fact—were appointed by the University because they were student leaders and possessed executive ability. Until 1990 the appointments to this office were made by the University on the basis of recommendations presented by the old Marshals. Since that time the recommendations have been made by the Senior Council. The office of University Marshal, has always been one of the highest honor and responsibility. The Marshals as a body have been representatives of the best type of the University undergraduate.

The following have been Head Marshalls :

'93-'96 JOSEPH E. RAYCROFT
'96-'97 WILLIAM SCOTT BOND
'97-'98 NOTT WILLIAM FLINT
'98-'99 WILLOUGHBY GEORGE WALLING
'99-'00' WALTER JOSEPH SCHMAHL

DAVID ALLAN ROBERTSON :

SHE was the only girl I ever saw who could really tie an Ascot. She always wore a box coat and a gray Sombrero, and her shoes had the widest extension soles that ever made a girl's feet look as big as a man's. She wrote a black, intoxicated-looking hand, which, as she confided to me, her own mother could not read. I was rather surprised to learn that she had a mother. I had never associated her with anything but a father. She always brought a book to class and read during the entire hour—usually it was Ibsen or Tolstoi.

One day a passage from Wordsworth was read and she was called on for a comment. I showed her the place. She read the first line, and then said she did not understand what was meant by the phrase "an aching joy." "How could joy be painful?"

History of the Class of 1902

THE most significant and hopeful omen in the recent development of the University of Chicago has been the phenomenal growth of class and college spirit—the forerunners of tradition. A school may boast of unlimited financial resources, of an unrivalled faculty, and of an imposing array of buildings, and still be far from great. A vital something is wanting. As a child grows into a consciousness of itself and develops a personality of its own through the ripening of certain distinctive traits, so does an institution of learning. This budding into consciousness is the peculiar feature of the progress of this university during the past three or four years.

Class spirit means ultimate college spirit. In initiating and guiding the latter by fostering the former, the Class of 1902 may, without undue presumption, claim for itself a position of unique prominence, in that it was first to see that the time was ripe for the growth of an ivy of tradition which should soften the sharp angles of the cold gray walls of intellectualism and materialism.

The function of '02 has been to set precedents. In a sea of green, "Harper's Young People of '98" received from the sophomores their earliest notions of class duty. The Freshmen Presentation plan originated with '02. The idea of an annual football game between the two lower classes was heartily seconded by '02. A feature of the "smoker" in '99, previous to the Brown-Chicago contest, was the spirit and activity of '02. Particularly exciting on that occasion was the struggle between freshmen and sophomores over the latter's banner and emblem. The most important contribution, however, of the present senior class was yet to come. A handful of the class, in its second year, had discussed the feasibility of organization, but early plans proved abortive. Success in abundance came the following school year, and the junior class of '01 was effectively organized. The class of 1902 was, therefore, the first in the history of the University to advance the idea of organization before the senior year.

To set precedents, be it repeated, was the function of 1902. Inter-class football games, the Freshmen Presentation exercises, class organizations in every year, class debating teams, and class athletic teams now occupy chapters in the great book of tradition along with the junior and senior promenades and Junior Day.

One event of prominence marks the history of the junior class of '01. The mock decennial celebration was eminently successful in itself and in acquainting the members with one another—all this betokening a satisfactory senior year.

Too much emphasis cannot be laid upon the energy and ability of individual members of the senior class of 1902. It is no exaggeration to say that the junior college council became, as never before, the voice of the student body of the two lower years through the push of a few members of '02. The same is true of the senior college council which is today a body of influence commanding respect. The University of Chicago Weekly, also, owes much of its present prosperity to men of the class of '02. And, in general, on athletic teams, on debating teams, in the dramatic club, in the musical clubs, and in scholarship awards, 1902 has never failed to be well represented. That the championship football team of '99 numbered among its members more men from '02 than from any other class will always be remembered as an evidence of the zeal of the class in university affairs.

Has the class added something to the vitality and prestige of its alma mater?—is the question which tests the strength of a particular class. By this standard it will be conceded that the class of 1902 was unusually strong. As a unit, and through individuals, '02 met ably such tasks as come ordinarily before a class in its various stages of university life, and, what is far higher, set enduring precedents along lines which mark the living class in the living university.

"What are you taking?" She asked.

"A double major in the Art of Receiving a Snub Gracefully, and four recitations a week in the Reduction of Feelings to a Pulp by the Use of a Hammer," I answered. "And you?"

"A Seminar in the Complete Annihilation of that Amount of Self Respect, Which Makes Life Endurable," she said.

I sighed, for I remembered that I had to make up a cut minor by taking six weeks of the Consideration of the Higher Affections, "which it is to be hoped will come to each member of the class."

THE day after Aunt Martha fell down stairs and broke her leg, I was called out of her room by the arrival of the Bashful Youth. He belonged to that cultured and refined class of people who retire at night and whose hands are sometimes soiled.

“How do you do?” Said he in a very lady-like voice. “How is your Aunt’s knee—that is her ankle—that is—I hope she is much better.”

I sat on the grass in front of Cobb. On the other side of the tree against which I leaned, I heard two fresh young voices:

"Say, George, this is fine, isn't it? These trees and the old gray buildings, and the stone seat—"

"What stone seat?"

"Why, that one over there!"

"Ha! ha! ha! That's one on you, Frank; Ha! ha! ha! That's not a seat. Some one's buried there. That's a grave."

"Why, no! That's the stone bench I used to read about in the 'Weekly' and in 'The Cap and Gown' when I was in prep. school."

"No, it's not. Fred Williams told me it was a grave; and he ought to know. He's a Senior."

"Well," slowly, as if awed by the name of Williams, "well, then, what is the meaning of the '96' carved on it?"

Pause. Then in an inspiration, "Oh, I guess that was the man's age."

The Vrai Historie of The Classe Naught Three

*Whan that Octobre hadde his course begunne
 The glorious yere eightean ninety-nine
 The Classe Naught-Three cam trooping through the doors
 Of oure moste anciente Halle, Cobb by name
 A Classe fut of youthes and maidens fair,
 Most wise and seemlie in hir regristring
 I'mannered far beyonl the common herde.
 In knowledge and experience soon grew
 This Classe in lecture room and learned lab,
 Beloven by all who mette and knew hem wel.*

*Eke hadde November reached his eighthe day
 When that the Classe clept Sophomore
 Gan greet the Classe Naught-Three with solemn rytes
 With foolish taunte and longue, and footless jestes,
 Than spak Sir Claude in rhymes meet
 To turn the joke upon his callowe heades,
 And Mother Goose, and gowen of grene seemed good
 When crowmen with his dignitie and witt.
 And soon confounded war the upperclassmen
 And gan iclaine the Classe Naught-Three,
 Which than with noble mighte the Bench Rush wonne
 Standing in hordes upon the Seigneur stonne
 Soone dark with mire from the boot-stamped campus.
 And shouting in ful crie the newe-gained name
 Yecarven on hir throbbing heartes, Naught-Three,
 So enden than the Freshmann Convocation.*

*Bul whan in padden cloulhes and divers guardes,
 Naught-Three's gret men combat upon the Fielde
 And met the slender, punie Sophomore teame,
 Than pitie and hir chivalrie gan break
 The heartes of alle that genrous band of folke.
 And in hir breastes waxed a haut resotve
 And whan that doughtie day was donne,
 Hi gav the major score unto the Sophs,
 As ever shoulde the strong unto the weake,
 And for hir mottoe on hir schield emblazed
 The vrai device Magnanimity.
 And for the gentillesse of the Classe that day,
 The names of alle that genrous team of knights
 And of Sir Horton, captain of the bande*

*Are scriben here on page of historie:
The valliant heroes Smith, and Eicher Cooke
And Horton playn upon the dexter fiede
While on the left were Nuckols, Wyman, Harper,
McNabb; and in the center foughte Sir Ellsworth,
Backing up the tourney Hogeland stood,
And Bard—The score of the fight stooa o to 5.
That yeare for the Cap and Gowne there wrote
Sir Riley, and the prope of all tiew newes,
Sir Chaplin graced the humble Weeklie boarde,
With Lewis and the tender poet Collins.
And with these honours wonne by worthie force
Of corpe and minde,
The Classe Naught-Three yfinished Freshman yeare.*

*And whan anyther falle cam rounde
To grete a newe and noble Sophomore classe,
Naught-Three stont fourth in goodlie nombers faire
With reddie witte and disposition true
New laurels for to winne Notre Matre deare,
This time with clever quippe and wittie speeche,
Sir Thomas Hair instruct the Freshies grene
And Prexy Lewis, and faire Ladie Dodge
The Dean of Women, and Sir Muller tall
Told hearte to hearte the Influences of our Schoole,
And of hire incommie and the tomes untold
To fill the mindes of the funny hoarde
Within the Infant Classe, naught-four.
And than ful longue and witlessly some boy
Of mannes heichte, but childish intellect
Replye mayde. But nay aye listend then.
Some days iwaned and on a morning faire
Bold Sophomores toure in bittes the naught-four flag
Which hadde ylaunted to the sonne and breaze,
And hombled so the bousting noumerailles.*

*But in the soon icominge foot ball game,
Twixt Naughty-Three and nouveau—clept naught-four,
Naught-Three again gav o'er the joies of victorie.
Not by hir owne desirous wille howe re.
For victorie is swoote to stalwart knighten.
But for a yeare full longue and strenuous
Hadde ilke football knight, not on the Team
Of Varsity renoun, gav o'er the Spote,
And being out of training, knew not howe
To act on signaills full and swiftlie given,
And howe to beare the combat and the toyls
Of that fult eager game—and so hi lost.
But honourable, and by a score not haut
And shouting to the ende "Naught-Three, Our Captain
Harry Smith, and notre younge U of C!"
And much renoun hi gained by hir plucke
And noble fightinge for hir loved Classe
Upon whos heart is graven endlesslie,
The names and frontes of the fearlesse knightes
Who strougled longue that day on Marshall Fielde.
Brave Hogeland and Sir Conrad, Campbell too,
And Butler, Lindenberger on the righte
And on the gauche, playen Harper, Eicher,
Wyman and Horton F, and quartier back
Foughte brave Sir Hal the Captain of the Teame

1904 Class History

"Hulla, baree, barah, baroar!
Hulla, baree, barah, baroar!
Who roar? We roar, Naughty Four."

THE first thing the class of 1904 did after its members were 'regularly matriculated' students, was to effect class organization. This was done by adopting a constitution and electing officers. The officers for the freshman year were: Samuel Fellows, President; E. J. Downey, Secretary; Frank Adams, Treasurer; L. A. Hopkins, Sergeant-at-Arms. Nineteen Four was the second class at Chicago, to organize in its freshman year.

One rainy Sunday night shortly after the organization was completed, Hopkins, Gaylord and "Stan" Rich hung a 1904 banner to the flag pole and then cut the halyard. The flag remained up fifteen hours when the sophomores of 1903 succeeded in getting it to the ground, and, after a hard fight in carrying it off; 1904 had begun to make history. A few weeks later our football men lined up against the team of '03, and, under the able captaincy of Backhouse won a brilliant, hard fought contest, by the score of 6 to 0. This was another feat that no other freshman class had ever accomplished.

At the Freshman Presentation the sophomores tried to inspire the '04's with a proper respect for upper-classmen, especially for themselves, but their jokes and jibes were cleverly answered and turned back upon them by the Freshman Presentation orator, Milton Sills. The only real defeat of our freshman year came in the spring, when the relay runners of 1903, proved a little too speedy for the wearers of the gold.

In October, 1901, we returned to College to find ourselves occupying an entirely new position. We were now sophomores. It was our turn to teach an entering class what it might do, and especially what it might not do. The class officers elected for the sophomore year were: Harry Wilkinson Ford, President; Walter Johnson, Vice-President; Miss Marie McEvoy, Secretary-Treasurer; and William Carey, Sergeant-at-Arms. An opportunity for the exercise of our sophomore prerogatives soon presented itself. On Hallowe'en the freshmen with great ingenuity, hung their banner from the top of the Power Plant chimney. After much scheming and no little daring, Sills, Ford and Heinen, by the use of grappling hooks succeeded in getting the flag and making away with it. But one defeat could not kill the ardor of the freshmen. They challenged for a football game. The game was played in November, the 1905 team getting a terrific drubbing. The score was 28 to 5. The '04 team was captained by Louer. On March 8th, 1902, a dual track meet with 1905 resulted in a decisive victory for the freshman team. Captain Hopkins and his men did their best but were not quite a match for their versatile opponents. The score by points was 58 to 41.

This is the record of facts in the history of the class of 1904, up to the end of its sophomore year, assuredly they give much promise for the future.

The Class of 1905

S with all freshman classes the class of '05 came to college unacquainted among themselves and unrecognized by the upper classmen. Since that time they have shown themselves to be a class of true mettle, worthy of recognition as one of the best freshman classes that have ever come to Chicago. The men who have won them this standing are mainly athletes and to them is due first consideration.

The principle athletic event in which the class was represented as such was the Freshman-Sophomore football game. This the freshmen lost by a score of five to twenty-seven. In its apparent implication this is unfortunate, for it misrepresents the resources of the class. It is not in the least an indication of class weakness; indeed it is an indication of their strength. At the time the game was played nine freshmen were unable to participate because they were on the training-table; a tenth was ineligible because of having been on the squad. Of the sophomores but two were disqualified on the same basis. The freshmen football men were too good—that was the trouble. Of the ten who made the training table three were awarded C's:—Jennison, Speik, and Maxwell. Jennison's plucky and consistent work throughout the season and his hard luck just before the Thanksgiving game have won him general and enthusiastic popularity. Speik's hard luck came at the first of the season, but he recovered in time to get into the Michigan and Wisconsin games where he played magnificently at end. Maxwell was fortunate in having no serious injury; he played with wonderful steadiness throughout the season and has the honor of playing in every game. It is not necessary to speak of the reputations with which these men came to the University. They have made a reputation for themselves here which by far outshines any preparatory work which they may have done. With our track athletes, however, the condition is different. As they have had no chance to show their mettle on the field, it is only by knowing what they did in preparatory schools that we are able to expect what we do of them.

The freshmen have among their numbers many athletes of whose records they can be justly proud. Blair and Granberg came with records of 10:1 for one hundred yards; Speik holds the record for the indoor shot-put of the middle-west and of Michigan; Quantrell has the middle-west record for the pole-vault and the high jump record for Cook County; Frend has broad jumped over twenty feet ten and is a hurdler of considerable ability; Cahill, Granberg, and Sherman are middle distance men of wide fame in academic circles. With college training these men should develop as much above the average college athlete as they were above the average in high school.

In a scholastic way the freshmen are supporting a movement—the organization of a "Freshmen Debating Club"—which in time will not only bring honor to their class but to the University as a whole. Heretofore no debating club has ever existed in any of the classes of the University; it is altogether a departure into a new field. The plan on which it was founded was first laid before the freshmen by Mr. Chandler who has helped and urged the movement to its present success. To him is due the honor of initiating the movement, but to the freshmen that of carrying it out. And certainly these men who are so earnestly striving to prepare themselves to represent their class in inter-collegiate debates are deserving of our greatest praise and our most earnest support.

Perhaps the freshman class best indicates its spirit in the avowed hope that next year's freshman class will beat them in football, have a better debating club, and more and better athletes than they have. They are wishing for the good of the University and they wish that each entering class may forge ahead of the preceding one. To subordinate class distinctions to the University, is true, loyal, college spirit; it is the spirit of the class of '05.

The Dramatic Club

During the past year the efforts of the Dramatic Club have been directed mainly to the establishment of a permanent and consistent place among student interests. In order to do this it has been necessary primarily to encourage and further the principles formulated by last year's club of making eligibility to membership conform to the basis of strict dramatic merit and ability. The mode of conducting trials for membership on the club has been revised and improved, in the endeavor to ascertain the real points of merit in the contestant and his ability to fill certain roles. Every contestant is thus assured of a perfectly fair and open trial and the club can obtain an estimate of its new member's worth.

The success of "Miss Flim Flam" which was given by the club in the winter quarter of 1901, disclosed the value of having the production of the plays under the direction of a professional coach. H. Stanley Davies was therefore entailed as dramatic coach for the club. On June 13, of last year, the club presented with marked success Augustin Daly's four act comedy "A Night Off." On the following day the play was produced again, in connection with the regular Junior Day exercises. The full cast for this play may be found in the Junior Day Program, on page 302.

With the opening of the school year for 1901-2, the club began work with the determination of outstripping all its previous attempts at dramatic presentation. A royalty was paid for Wm. Gillette's "All The Comforts of Home" and rehearsals were begun at once. At this point, however, we were apprised of the fact that the faculty had discovered objectionable features in "All The Comforts of Home" and had decided that it could not be given by the club. Although the time was limited, nothing was left to do but bow to the inevitable. Von Moser's, "The Secretary" was substituted with "A Complicated Affair," as a curtain raiser. The performance was given in the University Hall, Fine Arts Building, on December 14th. This was the first appearance of the club in a down town theater and also the first opportunity for laying aside all phases of amateurism. The high praise and applause given by the audience on this occasion is the best proof of its success.

The plays were cast as follows:

"A Complicated Affair"

On January 25th, occurred the sad and tragic death of H. Stanley Davies, the club's coach. Mr. Davies was a talented, conscientious and ambitious worker, who had the interests of the club deeply at heart. His personal magnetism, ready grasp of dramatic situations and complications, and thorough knowledge of the personelle of the club won for him the respect and admiration of all the members. His death is contemplated with deep sorrow and with the realization that his place will be with difficulty filled.

The latter part of January the club membership was enlarged from twenty to thirty, with a view to increasing the general student interest and for more frequent appearances of the club on University occasions. Mr. Bartley Cushing was also appointed to take Mr. Davies' position as coach

THE Quadrangle Chorus was organized by the members of Beecher Hall in the autumn quarter of 1900. For a short time it continued as a Beecher organization, and then threw open its membership to the residents of the four young women's halls. In the fall of 1901, the chorus was still further enlarged by the admission to its membership of any young woman in the University who had passed the required examination. Recently under the direction of Mr. Lester Bartlett Jones, the chorus has been entirely reorganized.

As You Like It

Given by the Students of the University of Chicago in the Quad-rangles, June the Fourteenth and Fifteenth,
MCM I

(In Connection with the Decennial Celebration.)

Last fall when it was announced that one of the favorite traditions of the University of Chicago students was to be violated and that we were not to have in 1901 a comic opera where local hits and fancy stunts would give us an evening of rollicking laughter and topics of conversation for weeks, we were much disappointed. But the disappointment was quickly dispelled by the announcement from the Department of Public Speaking that under its auspices the students of the University would present Shakespeare's "As You Like It" as one of the attractions of the decennial celebration in June.

Preparations began at once. The large number who contested for the various parts, which were finally assigned in April, indicated how general was the enthusiasm over the performance. Professor Clark superintended the interpretation of lines. Professor Blanchard directed the chorus work of the foresters, and Mr. Frank Torrence Wallace was the stage director. To the persistent and careful efforts of these men, to the hard work and the natural ability of the players was due the success of the performance of "As You Like It."

The play was particularly pleasing from an æsthetic point of view. The action took place under the open sky and the actors walked on real grass and beneath real trees. The beauty of the scenery and the effective electric lighting was a result of the skillful work of Mr. Eliot Norton, the stage manager. The attractiveness and appropriateness of the costumes showed that in planning them neither care nor expense had been spared.

All the parts were well taken—so well taken that everybody was surprised to find how much real dramatic ability existed in the University. Miss Grace Baird as Rosalind was exceedingly charming and unaffected, and interpreted her part with an ease and spontaneity unusual in an amateur. She was supported by a Celia, Miss Lorena King, who was equally capable and pleasing.

The complete cast was as follows:

Senior College Oratorical Contest

The annual home contest in oratory for the Senior Colleges took place on February 20. The new system of concentrating the prizes in one contest met with favor, a larger number of students than usual having been thus induced to compete. An unusually large audience attended.

The contestants who appeared in the finals, and their subjects were as follows:

GEORGE T. RAGSDALE		"The Eastern Question"
HARRY J. LURIE		"The Land Question and Social Reform"
BERTRAM G. NELSON		"The World's Orator"
JOSEPH W. PRIEST		"Egypt's New Era"

The Christian Union

The Christian Union, a general organization of the entire body of instructors and students, has charge of the organized religious and philanthropic activities of the University. The University officially, by its President, Faculty and Chaplain, provides services on week days. The students have voluntarily organized the Young Women's Christian Association and the Young Men's Christian Association in order to hold devotional meetings, and do aggressive Christian labor. The Philanthropic Committee of the Christian Union has charge of the University Settlement. In addition to these organizations, the Christian Union has charge of the University religious service, held each Sunday morning.

The Executive Committee of the Christian Union is composed as follows: Ex-officio members: President and Chaplain of the University, and officers of the three organizations already mentioned; members by election: President, Vice President and a representative from each of the great divisions of the University (Junior College, Senior College, Graduate School and Divinity School); member by appointment, the Secretary.

The Executive Committee for the current year is as follows:

The President; The Vice President; The Secretary-Treasurer.

The University Settlement

House 4638 Ashland Avenue

The University Settlement is a group of people who make their home in an industrial community, and live with, not for, the people. By using this home as a neighborhood clubhouse, they form a common social center for the entire community. Standing for a higher civic and social life, the settlement investigates and attempts to improve existing conditions. Subjectively, it is the result of the longing to make real, by social deeds, the growing sense of the oneness of humanity. Practically, it is an opportunity for the altruistic impulses to have wholesome expression in work adapted to the individual; and a study of the program of work will indicate to any student where he may be of use.

The Missionary Volunteer Band

Of the University of Chicago

This Band is a Union of those students in the University who expect to become foreign missionaries and are banded together for mutual helpfulness and to inspire others with missionary enthusiasm.

The Band was first organized in 1892, and has existed almost continuously since that time. It is under the supervision of the Missionary Committee of the Y. M. C. A., and is also affiliated with "The Chicago Volunteer Union for Foreign Missions"—an organization which includes students from fourteen different educational institutions of Chicago.

The Woman's Union of the University of Chicago

THE Woman's Union was organized December 19, 1901, for the purpose of uniting the women of the University for the promotion of their common interests. It is hoped that the women of the University will find in this organization a means of uniting them in a large and generous fellowship and of meeting some of the social needs which many members of the University have felt in the past. The members are of two kinds, regular or honorary. Regular membership is open to the following: Women students registered in any department of the University; women members of the faculty, women officers, and women in the employ of the University; women members of the families of trustees, faculty and officers of the University; wives of registered students; and alumnae of the University. Honorary membership may be conferred by the unanimous vote of the Union upon recommendation from the membership committee.

The rooms of the Union are open daily, for the use of members, from 8:15 A.M., to 6:15 P.M., a woman custodian being in constant attendance. The special features are: a reading room, a rest room, and a lunch-room. A series of informal "At Homes" have been instituted, occurring on Wednesdays, from 3 to 5 o'clock P.M.

Regular business meetings are held during the third week of each quarter, and special meetings at such other times as may seem best to the president, the chairman of the house committee, or to any three members of the Union. The business of the Union is conducted by a Council, consisting of a president, a vice-president, a secretary, a treasurer, and a house committee of seven, who serve as chairmen of sub-committees on membership, finance, entertainment, philanthropy, hospitality, and lunch-room. At the time of organization, the following officers were elected:

MISS MARION TALBOT	President
MRS. HENRY R. HATFIELD	Vice President
MISS RUTH HARDY	Treasurer
MISS MILDRED RICHARDSON	Secretary
MISS GERTRUDE DUDLEY	Chairman of the House Committee

The members of the House Committee are :

MISS ISABEL BAKER	Chairman of Committee on Membership
MRS. WARNER FITE	Chairman of Committee on Finance
MRS. GEORGE C. HOWLAND	Chairman of Committee on Entertainment
MRS. H. H. DONALDSON	Chairman of Committee on Philanthropy
MISS ELEANOR CULTON	Chairman of Committee on Hospitality
MISS SUSAN W. PEABODY	Chairman of Committee on Lunch-room

The Students' Club House

RUE education aims to produce harmony with environment—to enable men to live, and to live nobly. The American college of to-day is the result of experience which has been adapted to environment. It differs from both the colleges and universities of Europe. It is the outgrowth of American life. The early college was designed to be a training school for preachers and teachers. But with the expansion of the nation and the development of its material resources, the scientific and technical curriculum has gained upon the older form, and to-day has place in every college of eminence in the country. Wondrous material changes have been wrought in the foundation of libraries, the equipment of laboratories, the erection of student dormitories, the establishment of professional and technological schools. Nor has the evolution ended here. Continental ideals and practices—witness the seminar—have been assimilated, although, fortunately, all attempts to empty the American college of its native characteristics have proven futile.

These changes have naturally resulted in an enormous increase in the number of students in our universities and colleges. Yet in two respects higher education has been curiously backward: first, in appreciating the fact that a certain amount of physical culture may be profitably joined with mental effort, and second, in developing the social instinct in the student during the formative period of life, when character is most adaptable and the lessons of experience are most easily learned. The first of these has now been overcome. The college man to-day secures relaxation from his books in healthful and well-directed exercise either in the gymnasium or upon the athletic field. But the social life of almost every American college is a yet undeveloped factor; or if it has been developed, it has grown hap-hazardly and is either lacking in coherence or else has hardened into narrow cliques which perpetuate unwise traditions and breed antagonism. Broad, genuine, sympathetic, social life is still an unknown element in far too many institutions. But the change is happening—has happened. To-day three institutions—Pennsylvania, Harvard and Dartmouth have student club houses which are the hearth and home of the whole student body. These endowments have magnified the meaning of the words alma mater in the institutions concerned. The trustees of the University of Chicago long ago realized that liberal culture implied the development of the American college student in all right relations, intellectual, physical, æsthetic, social—and the establishment of the Students' Club House marks the consummation of this purpose in the minds of the trustees to provide a perfect education, lying four-square, in the Liberal Arts, in Science, in Gymnastics,—and in the manners that make men.

The Committee of the Students' Club House

THE aim of the University authorities in the selection of this committee was to make it broadly representative of every student element or organization in the institution. To that end delegates have been chosen by each school, including Divinity, Graduate, Medical, (and the Law School will be included when organized); the Senior and Junior Colleges; the Student Councils; the Greek Letter Fraternities; the Houses; the various Student organizations, like the Glee and Mandolin Club. Certain members of the faculty have been added also to act in an advisory capacity. The full committee comprehends sixty-seven persons, as follows:

The Prohibition Club.

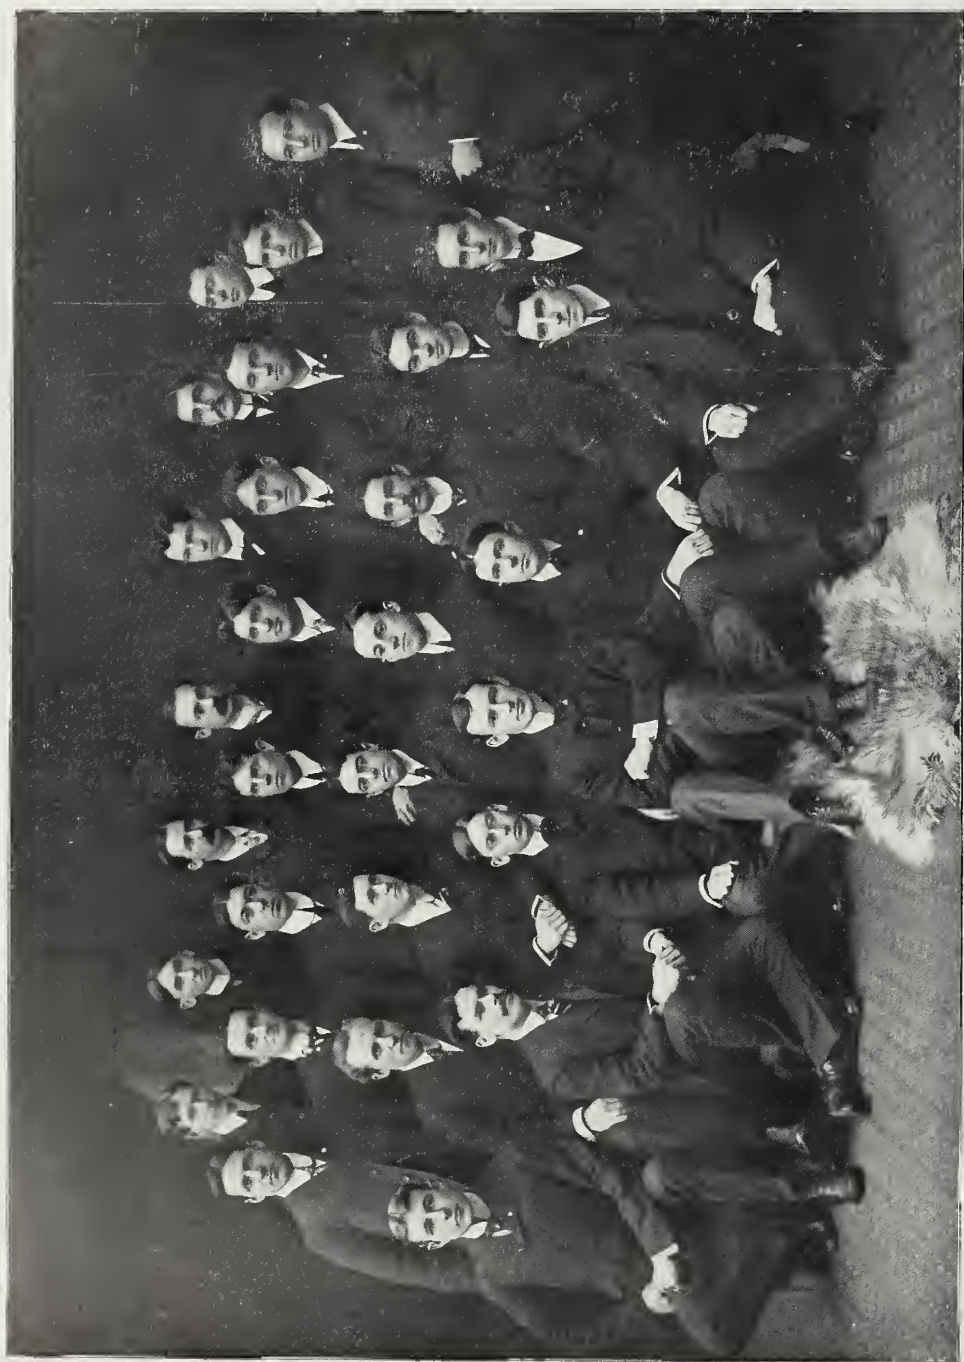

THE Prohibition Club is one of the many organizations that center about the University. The chief purpose of the Club is the preparation of young people for aggressive work and leadership in the moral and political reform made necessary by the strong hold that the liquor traffic has upon society and the nation.

The Club holds bi-weekly meetings in the Y. M. C. A. rooms in Haskell, consisting of a business meeting, followed by a short program dealing with the political, economic and moral significance of the saloon and practical methods for its removal.

The membership is not large but it makes up in enthusiasm what it lacks in numbers.

FOOT BALL

FROM the point of view of games won, the season of 1901 was the most disastrous ever experienced by a University of Chicago football team. Our hard luck began during the summer, when Captain Henry decided not to return to college. Then almost before the season opened we had a large squad on the hospital list. This squad was large during the whole season, and no sooner did one man recover than another got hurt, and as a result the men never had the advantage of team work.

This deprived us at different times of Horton, Perkins, Atwood and Speik. But, as if the loss of Captain Henry and a large hospital force were not a large enough handicap for Coach Stagg to work with, we had a still greater blow, for while playing in the Beloit game, Sheldon was so badly hurt that our crippled team had to play without its "little captain."

This last straw almost broke the camel's back, and the team was only saved from utter rout by our old reliable veteran — George Garrey, who stepped into the captain's place and kept the team fighting up to the end. It is just this spirit of fighting together until the end for which we shall always remember the team of '01. We were defeated, and defeated by large scores, but until the final whistle blew, the men always fought, no matter how large the odds against them, and fought in a way which drew nothing but admiration from friends and opponents. If the team had had the luck which its pluck deserved, we would again have had the "Championship of the West."

But while it is certainly sweet to win, this is not the only object of college athletics, and our team of this year did more for our 'Varsity than did the champion team of 1899. For it aroused the spirit of the students in a way in which it had never been aroused before. It disproved the old saying that "Chicago men have no college spirit." For this year when we needed it, it was there, and every man stood right with the team and never lost confidence. So our team this year was not a failure, but played its part in our college history. This part, if not so brilliant, was just as necessary for the University as that of any other team.

Major and Minor

The smoke wreaths curl away airily,
The red flame whirls about cheerily,
The snow at the panes swirls merrily,
And the song in my heart is glad.
My pipe from my hand falls wearily,
The dying coals drop drearily,
The winter wind sighs eerily,
And the song in my heart is sad.

"nobody hurt"

HE record of the baseball team for 1901 is hardly one of which to be proud. Although the manner in which Michigan and Beloit were defeated early in the spring, led many to believe that we had a winning team, it did not continue so. When the other teams began to round into championship form, we failed to show the necessary improvement. Probably the reason for this is that we had so little material from which to choose a team. The constant shifting about to make up the best combination possible worked havoc with team play.

In the western championship race we finished third, but defeated Northwestern four times, Wisconsin twice, and Michigan and Iowa once each. We were defeated by Illinois four times, Michigan three times, Oberlin twice, and once by both Wisconsin and Purdue.

If we could have won another game from Michigan, their title to the western championship would have been a shady one. This, too, was the second season in succession that we were unable to score a single victory over Illinois. No doubt the hardest blow was our defeat by both Oberlin and Purdue, a thing that never happened before.

About June the first, we started on a finely planned eastern trip. Our first game, which was with Oberlin, was lost by a close score. The game was so close and relations between both teams were so pleasant that another game was arranged for, on our return from the east. Brown, one of the strongest of the eastern college teams, played us very closely until the last inning, when she pulled away and won handily. As soon as the game was over we were put through a stiff practice, as it was evident that we were not in very good condition. The next day we met Harvard, the team that afterward won the championship from Yale. Our best showing was made against this team, the score being seven to one. Captain Smith was in the box and succeeded in scoring the only strikeout of the season against Ried, Harvard's captain. We now started home, playing Holy Cross, Syracuse, Oberlin and Michigan on the way. In the first two games we were badly defeated, but managed to pull ourselves together and make a hard fight for the other two.

The season closed with three games on Marshall Field. If we could win these games it would be a fitting close for so disastrous a year. We succeeded in winning in a creditable manner the games with Wisconsin and Northwestern. The last game was played with Michigan. Both teams played very well and made the score very close, but Michigan won. In a race run over a rough and stony road, we were passed at the tape in our last spurt.

Track Team 1901

THE season of 1901 was a very hard one for the track team. Only five of the team of 1900 returned to college and we therefore had a very small number of experienced men. Even with the new material, it was the smallest team in the history of the University. It was composed of a couple of old and tried men, one or two new men who developed into championship form and a half dozen men of fair ability. This is not saying, however, that the team was not a good one. It would compare favorably with almost any team in our history, but more was demanded of it. The rapid improvement in track and field athletics in the West for the last few years has been phenomenal; and Chicago, while improving rapidly from year to year, did not quite keep pace with her rivals—Michigan and Wisconsin—in 1901.

The schedule for the season was one of the hardest any Maroon team has had to go through. The five indoor meets were: Y. M. C. A. in the gymnasium, Feb. 2; Michigan in the gymnasium, Feb. 16; Amateur Athletic Union indoor championship, at Milwaukee, March 2; Notre Dame—Illinois Triangular Meet, at Notre Dame, March 9; and Michigan, at Ann Arbor on March 16. This series of difficult meets came in rapid succession, and the small team representing the University, nearly every man of which had to compete in every meet, showed the effects of overwork before the series was over. Every team has its misfortunes and accidents, and we probably did not get any more than our share of them, but because our team was so small they bore very hard upon us.

The first meet, that with the Y. M. C. A., Chicago won easily. In the Michigan meet each institution was represented by a team, limited to ten men. Michigan won by a narrow margin, through her superiority in the field events. One of the most noticeable events of the evening was the defeat of "Bill" Moloney and Harvey Lord in the half mile. The race was run pursuit fashion. Moloney was running behind Lord with the intention of getting second and therefore did not run to his limit. In the A. A. U. indoor championship held at Milwaukee, Chicago took third place, being beaten out by the First Regiment, I. N. G. and the University of Wisconsin. "Bill" Moloney did not run, as he was saving himself for the Notre Dame meet, the following Saturday. If he had run in, and won, the quarter, Chicago would have passed Wisconsin.

At Notre Dame the next week, the Maroons were deprived of the banner by a seemingly partisan decision of a Notre Dame Inspector. The score stood in favor of Chicago and the cup for the relay race had been awarded us, when the inspector and the referee appeared and took the cup away, alleging that in the third relay Fred Moloney cut in too close in front of the Notre Dame runner and thereby fouled him. This decision gave Notre Dame the meet and we had to be contented with second place. In the next meet with Michigan, at Ann Arbor, the Maroons plainly showed signs of overwork. Michigan defeated us by a much larger score than in the previous meet, and Moloney was again beaten in the half mile by Hayes.

The outdoor season was not quite as long as the indoor, but the meets were only a week apart. They were: Michigan at Ann Arbor, May 18; Wisconsin at Marshall Field, May 25; and the Conference Intercollegiate on Marshall Field, June 2. In the Michigan meet Chicago was very successful. Michigan won by points, with a narrow margin, but Chicago won eight first places to Michigan's six. Michigan won by seconds and thirds. The feature of the meet, however, was the half mile run between the old rivals Captain Howard Hayes, of Michigan and Captain "Bill" Moloney, of Chicago. Moloney had beaten Hayes in the Intercollegiate the previous year by a couple of feet. Hayes had twice beaten Moloney in dual indoor meets run in pursuit fashion, but still Moloney's friends had confidence in him. They felt sure that, running outdoors and on the same side of the track as Hayes, he could win. Moloney won easily, by about fifteen yards, in the excellent time of 1:59 $\frac{1}{2}$. The whole meet was entirely satisfactory to Chicago and regarded in the light of victory.

In the next meet, that with Wisconsin, Chicago was again defeated by a narrow margin. The feature of the meet was the unexpected winning of the dashes by "Bill" Moloney. Chicago was crippled by the loss of Hopkins, who was counted on to win the broad jump. By the time the Conference meet came around, it was three weeks straight for the Maroons, and they were nearly all stale. Hopkins was still unable to compete. "Bill" Moloney especially was not in the best of shape and was defeated by Merrill, of Beloit, in a very fast quarter. He was so used up by this that he was unable to run the half. Fred Moloney did his usual high-class performance, by winning both of the hurdles in record time. Chicago was third in the meet, with seventeen points, being beaten by Michigan and Wisconsin. With the Conference meet the regular season closed. It was a season of hard struggles against odds, of good achievements and of narrow defeats.

At the beginning of the Fall Quarter several of the members of the 1901 team and several Freshman athletes were sent to Louisville, Kentucky, to take part in the Kentucky State Fair Meet, on Oct. 5. The team was very successful. The University of Chicago won the largest number of points of any institution, thirty-two in all. Fred Moloney won the high hurdles in 15 $\frac{3}{4}$ and the low in 24 $\frac{3}{4}$, both of which records are the best he has ever made. He also won the broad jump. The team came home with a large number of handsome silver cups and trophies.

TENNIS TEAMS

THE tennis season of 1901 did not prove as successful for Chicago as that of previous years. For the first time in the history of the University, the team failed to carry off first honors in the Western Intercollegiate. Lacking such experienced players as Carr Neel, W. S. Bond, the MacQuiston brothers, and H. N. Gottlieb, who had in the past carried the Maroon to victory on the courts, and weakened by the absence in Europe of Jerome Magee, on whom had been based hopes of the championship in singles, the team lost both the singles and the doubles to Michigan. Michigan also defeated Chicago in the only dual tournament of the season, after a close contest, by the score of 4 matches to 2.

The first tournament in which the team participated was the Western Intercollegiate, held at the Kenwood Country Club during the week of May 26. In a tournament to decide Chicago's representatives, Bruce and Axtell were selected in singles, and Axtell and Bingham won the privilege of contesting in doubles by defeating Bruce and Belfield in a three set match. The teams entered in the tournament were, with the exception of Chicago, slightly superior on the average than those of past years. Northwestern represented by the veterans, Zimmerman, Lloyd and Patten; Michigan with its two stars, Wherry and Danforth; and Wisconsin with Helmholz and Seaman, two strong young players, were Chicago's most serious opponents. Noble of Armour Institute, who had been picked as the possible champion in singles from his record of previous years, met his Waterloo in the first round, being disposed of by Zimmerman of Northwestern, 2-6, 6-2, 6-1.

Chicago was unfortunate in its drawings, Bruce and Axtell being compelled to meet two of the strongest players in their first matches. Danforth of Michigan won from Bruce after two closely played sets by the scores of 8 6, 8-6. Helmholz of Wisconsin experienced less difficulty with Axtell who was clearly off his game. In the semi-finals, Wherry, captain of the Michigan team, disposed of Helmholz of Wisconsin, 6-0, 6-3. Danforth his team mate experienced more difficulty with Zimmerman of Northwestern and saved himself from defeat only by superior steadiness and lasting powers. The match was one of the closest played in the tournament. Danforth finally won by the score: 4-6, 7-5, 6-3. In the finals Danforth won the championship in singles by defeating Wherry, 6-3, 6-3, 6-4.

In doubles, Chicago was somewhat more successful, gaining through them the ranking of second team in the Association. Axtell and Bingham won their way into the finals by defeating the Northwestern team, Zimmerman and Patten, who had previously beaten Noble and Hammond of Armour Institute. Danforth and Wherry won the lower half of the tournament by defeating Helmholz and Seaman of Wisconsin in the semi-finals in straight sets. The Michigan team proved too strong for Axtell and Bingham in the championship match, winning by the score: 6-3, 6-1, 7-5.

On May 31 Chicago met Michigan in their annual dual tournament on the courts of the Quadrangle Club. Four matches in singles and two in doubles were played. Chicago lost the singles by the score of 1 match to 3, but succeeded in breaking even in the doubles. At one time it seemed probable that the tournament would end in a tie, but Guthrie, Michigan's fourth man in singles, by finally pulling a long drawn match with Richards out of the fire, decided the tournament in favor of the Maize and Blue.

Just before the close of the Spring Quarter, a tournament was held to decide the championship of the University in singles. Axtell had been compelled to leave for Germany to take up some graduate study before the date of this tournament, so only the five remaining members of the team contested. Harry Belfield by winning all his matches earned the title of University Champion for 1901.

During the Summer Quarter, as usual, a great deal of interest was manifested in tennis at the University. In the annual Summer tournament, Harvey MacQuiston won the singles, defeating his brother Paul in the finals. The doubles proved a surprise, Professor Angell and Dr. Hobbs, the faculty representatives, winning the finals from the MacQuiston brothers in a close five set match.

Towards the end of the summer a Round Robin tournament was held, in which the following players participated: C. A. Torrey, A. A. Stagg, J. W. Bingham, A. P. Nelson and Allen Frake. Torrey won out, losing but one of his matches. Bingham and Professor Stagg were tied for second.

In the Western Championship held at the Kenwood Country Club in July and in various other tournaments held in the West during the summer, several Chicago University players participated. Among others were the MacQuiston brothers, Torrey, Nelson, Bingham, Frake, and T. B. Smith.

In the Woman's Western Championship held at the Kenwood Country Club in August, Chicago was represented by Mrs. A. A. Stagg. Professor and Mrs. Stagg also participated in the mixed doubles.

A new annual tennis event was inaugurated at the University at the commencement of the Autumn Quarter. A tournament for the Autumn Championship was held which brought out an unusual number of players in spite of the fact that the season was practically closed. Jerome Magee, who had returned to the University from a year's absence in Europe, won the singles, and Proctor and Wellington carried off the doubles.

Golf

Although golf has not yet reached the "C" stage, it has reached that point deserving of some little attention, because it is participated in more generally by faculty and undergraduate than any of our other sports. Considering this it is not at all surprising that we have developed quite a number of first-class golfers. Last summer's tournament, which was finally won by Herschberger, with Pettet runner up, brought forward some very close and interesting matches.

The great drawback to golf last season was the lack of a first-class links, but this factor should be greatly eliminated with the completion of the new 18 hole course in Jackson Park.

1898— “ Richburg;	“ Nelson and Richburg
1899— “ Dowie;	“ Dowie and Hubbard
1901— “ Nelson;	“ Nelson and Mitchell

There was a considerable revival of interest in handball this year due, in part, to the large number of young and promising players who have appeared among the freshmen and sophomores. The interest centered chiefly around the championship tournament held in the fall quarter. Several of the old men, including W. C. Mitchell, J. W. Priest, C. A. Torrey, J. W. Bingham and A. P. Nelson, served to give interest to the tournament, while the newer men, Vincent Norton, H. Miller, J. Garlick and Chaniberlin, provided some highly interesting matches. Norton, however, was the only one of the new men to reach the semi-finals, where he was beaten rather handily by Mitchell. Nelson, after winning from Torrey, came out against Mitchell in the finals where truly championship handball was played, Nelson winning the tournament and the championship by the score: 21-9, 21-14, 7-21, 21-10.

In the finals of the doubles, Norton and Priest showed greater teamwork than Nelson and Mitchell, but could not stand up against their opponents' individual play, losing by the score: 3 games to 1.

The Military Company

The University of Chicago Military Company during the year 1901 was very successful. Under the supervision and direction of Lieutenant-Colonel H. R. Brinkerhoff of the United States Army, who was detailed officially to take charge of the work, the squad has made rapid progress. He is Professor of Military Science and Tactics and gives lectures on that subject. He is also present at drills. One excellent feature of last year's work was the introduction of a new system of physical culture exercises. Drills take place three times a week and a detachment takes target practice every evening. The company also has the privilege of target practice at Fort Sheridan of which it frequently avails itself. Captain William E. DeSombre has recently received an appointment as Second Lieutenant of Artillery in the Regular Army. He will leave college at the end of the Winter Quarter to take this position.

THE work in the Woman's Gymnasium during the past year has shown an advance over the preceding, both in numbers and in the sports which have been indulged in. Basket Ball retained its popularity, and in the Winter Quarter a series of open games were held. The prize, a silver cup, was won by the Senior College team for the second time in a series of three games, and remains in their permanent possession. The first gymnastic contest which the women have had was held in March. In addition to Basket Ball, teams in Indoor Baseball were organized for the Spring Quarter, and regular schedules for rowing were adopted. In the Fall Quarter, in addition to Basket Ball and Baseball, Fencing, and Lawn Hockey have been added.

The University, working under some adverse circumstances, has demonstrated the success of what is held as an ideal system of work, namely: the arrangement of gymnastics so that each student may have some sport with her work, and that the gymnastic training shall accompany this, keeping her in condition for the more vigorous work of the games.

The Freshman-Sophomore Rush

Hallowe'en 1901 will long be memorable to those who were members of the University at that time, for under cover of its mist and drizzle three stalwart freshmen, Jennison, Magee and Speik, climbed up the inside of the newly completed chimney of the power plant and by means of a rope noose hung their class banner half way between the top and bottom, a challenge to every Sophomore in the University. But, if Hallowe'en is to be memorable, the next morning should surely be. The Freshmen, confident of the security of their emblem, paid little attention to the lowering glances which the upper-classmen cast at it, and made no effort to guard the approaches to the chimney.

Suddenly those watching the tower from the campus saw three forms appear at the top, and presently the word passing from mouth to mouth brought the whole student body—most prominently of all the two lower classes—flocking from Cobb and the other buildings across the street to take part in or witness the approaching melee.

Meanwhile Ford, Sills and Heinen, the three men who had scaled the chimney, were fishing over the edge with grappling hooks for a hold on the rope loop from which the coveted banner was suspended, and their classmates below were forming for defense in the ditch at the entrance to the chimney.

Before the 1905 men had massed for the first charge, the 1904 leaders at the top of the tower succeeded in drawing up the loop, and, securing the flag, withdrew from sight. This was the signal for a mad rush on the part of the Freshmen, in a frantic effort to capture the entrance to the tower and the daring three as they descended.

Three times the Freshmen charged and failed to break the ranks of the Sophomores, but on the next attempt swept them back against the walls, and the whole inside of the huge fire-place was filled with a swirling, struggling, confused mass of under-classmen. The fiercest of the struggle lasted for over ten minutes, during which time Freshmen and Sophomores alike were acquiring a respectable disguise of mud and blood. Then an upper-classman from the vantage point of a scaffold brought a hose to play on the combatants, who straightway forgot the zest of conflict in a hasty attempt to avoid the stream of water.

In the confusion Ford, Sills and Heinen with the banner divided and hid upon their persons, emerged from the chimney and escaped unobserved. The Freshmen quickly rallied and surrounding the Sophomores rushed them again, forcing them into Ellis Avenue. By this time it was generally known by both classes that the Sophomore leaders had escaped with their trophy, and the rush degenerated to desultory skirmishes between scattered groups on the way from Snell to Cobb. The last act of the lively inter-class dramatic spectacle came off a few days later in the south end of Haskell, when "Prexy" met the class leaders and awarded them forty cuts apiece for distinguished conduct on the field of battle.

The Dramatic Club Trials

There is on the first floor of Haskell,
A room that is used all the day ;
Sometimes by a faculty meeting,
Sometimes by the Y. M. C. A.
'Tis there that the President lectures,
That he makes the conditioned men shake;
'Tis there that Prof. Starr gives receptions,
With his Mexican ice cream and cake;
'Tis there the divinity students
Expound their advice by the mile;
And 'twas there on that first floor of Haskell
That I had my dramatic club trial.
I went in and they gave me a number
And then I went out in the hall
And paced up and down on the marble,
Awaiting the doorkeeper's call.
At last I got up on the platform,
My face was all pallid and pale.
I looked at the jury before me,
And I said : " Here's where I go to jail."
I thought I had better plead guilty,
But nobody uttered a sound.
I gave one look at the ceiling,
I gave one look at the ground.
The piece that I spoke was from Shakespeare ;
The part where the Muses contrive
To have the old man tell Orlando
They're going to burn him alive.
" O unhappy youth," and I looked it.
I was all in a tremble of fear.
" Come not within this habitation ;"
And I thought—why the deuce am I here ?
And during my whole recitation
The jury exchanged wicked looks,
And taking their pens and their pencils
They wrote something down in their books.
And then I had horrible visions
Of guillotines, gallows and chains,
With electric devices upholstered
To make you forget earthly pains.
And when I had done my selection,
I started to go to the lake;
But the judge put a stop to my exit,
For I still had a thrashing to take.
" Young man, please repeat what I tell you,
Interpreting it as you will,"
And with that the judge gave me a sentence,
And with that the whole room became still.
" Our Jack has been killed at Manila,"
I thought of the people at home,
" Our Willie just died at Chicago,
We shouldn't have let the boy roam."
Again did the terrible jury
Indulge in the terrible looks.
Again did the terrible pencils
Write things in the terrible books.

"I'm in trouble, I want you to help me,"
 Was the next thing that I had to say.
 Now, they all really seemed to believe it,
 But that didn't drive it away.
 For they made me impersonate people
 Of every conceivable class,
 From a bean-eating banker of Boston
 To the farmer who blew out the gas.
 At the close of this fierce inquisition
 I was forced to make love to the floor,
 And to swear an eternal devotion
 To the shining brass knob on the door;
 To gaze at the gas jet with rapture,
 To ask an old chair to be mine,
 And to say to the pane in the window:
 "A life beside thee—how divine!"
 With that I got down from the platform,
 Once more I walked out in the hall
 Where I saw the next terrified victim
 Respond to the doorkeeper's call.

The Personal Note

"Shows delicate insight; technique above reproach," read Katherine, as we walked toward Fifty-fifth street on our way from Cobb.

"Listen to this—'artistic and lyric;' and this—'you have a sympathetic touch.'"

Katherine was taking English 3. The fact that the instructor was very young, passably good-looking, and had to do another man that she was original, did not lessen her interest in the course.

When we came to Marshall Field, she folded her themes and we each selected a knot-hole in the hot fence and applied an eye thereto.

"Wouldn't it be great to run on a track outdoors?" I said. "You would get so thin. Just look at that man; he's a perfect rail."

Katherine's ideal woman—as far as looks go—is the kind shown by the India famine pictures

She bristled at my slight.

"I am as thin as that man," she said.

"No, you aren't," I answered, "not nearly."

"Well," she said, "I am as thin as the man in the white shirt, anyway."

I was going to contest this also; but I became aware of a presence. The young English professor was at my elbow, his eye glued to a hole.

Katherine says it was very tactful of him to keep it there. But I think he was looking for the man in the white shirt.

A tiny snow-flake crystal, glinting, cold,
 Beneath the warm sun's loving touch,
 Runs, limpid water through the frost-bound mould
 To arouse some crocus, sleeping overmuch.

So truths in exquisite inertia rest
 Upon the memory's fallow ground,
 Until, by impulse from God's spirit blessed,
 They quicken deeds with selfless sunlight crowned.

A Little Thing

HE often wondered if he were fickle. People sometimes accused him of being so. He did not want to be fickle—at least he did not want that reputation. He wondered, also, if it were possible for a fellow to be really in love with two girls at the same time. If this were impossible then he was fickle. He knew that almost all the philosophy was against him on this point, but he did not care much for that. He believed, in fact he knew, that he was really in love,—and that he was in love with two girls—at the same time. He wasted no time surmising whether either of these girls loved him. He was honest. He told himself that he must find out, if he could, which of the two girls he loved the best, and then try to make her love him. He was a Senior, and he had sense. Like most Seniors with sense he was free from any inordinate conceits.

One of these two girls was in the University. He saw her daily. She was a club girl, popular, entertaining, influential in a social way; she was the cleverest girl he knew; she had a way of getting whatever she wanted with perfect ease. The other one had never been to college; it seemed to him she did not need to go—she knew so much without going. She was not so showy or so brilliant as the college girl, but she was very genuine, he thought, very human. Whenever he was in doubt as to which one he should call on of a Sunday evening or which he should take to the University affairs he settled his difficulty by flipping up a coin. The decision of the coin was absolute. He always abided by it no matter what the circumstances were or what the consequences might be.

It came time for the Washington "Prom"—the last one he should ever attend as an undergraduate. He tossed the coin. It told him to take Miss James, the University girl. One of his fraternity brothers immediately asked Miss Sansome. Our Senior made up his mind that he would decide between these two. They would both be at the "prom". He would decide then. Just how he would reach the decision he knew not. He only knew that he was going to decide.

The "prom" was brilliant. He thought he had never before enjoyed a dance so much as he was enjoying this one. In his mind he thanked his partner for the good time he was having. After all he thought, she is the one—she is so experienced, so sure of herself. He had the next dance with her. The orchestra struck up the "Boola" and they glided away. He heard just behind him the noise of soft cloth viciously rent. He paused. "Oh, never mind," said Miss James, "it's only Miss Sansome's skirt. I haven't time to help her. She ought to keep it from trailing on the floor." He said nothing. But he thought. He was disappointed. He felt as though he had done something mean himself. The incident left a bad taste in his mouth.

A few dances later Miss Sansome was his partner. As they reached the upper end of the hall she stopped, remarking as she did so: "There is Miss James sitting this out all alone. Let's go and sit with her. A girl feels terribly uncomfortable sitting out a dance all alone." They went.

He was not very talkative in the carriage going home that night. "Why so pensive and taciturn tonight?" queried Miss James as they reached the door of her house. "You haven't said a word all the way except 'yes' and 'no'."

"I have been thinking," he replied, "how much we are influenced by little things; how a little thing often causes us to make the most important decisions of our lives." He said good night and re-entered the carriage. She smiled to herself and wondered what he was talking about.

I loved you and you loved me,
And we parted;
You with hope of high renown,
I broken-hearted.
You won a name the world revered,
And homage true;
I kept the mem'ry of our love,
And pitied you.

Four Quarters

Have you ever known the Summer Quarter maid?
In her head vast stores of knowledge she has laid;
With her fountain pen and glasses
She is never late to classes;
Yes, the summer dame's a model, it is said.

Have you rushed the girl who enters in the Fall?
She is crazy over Varsity football;
She simply worships dances,
Even Snell her soul entrances,
And she thinks herself important in the Fall.

The maiden of the Winter you have seen;
She has just received a message from the Dean,
That she flunked in English I,
Or her cuts had been o'erdrawn;
Perchance this Winter maiden you have been.

Have you ever met the couples of the Spring?
Bookish learning is a long forgotten thing;
Of the Junior "Prom" they talk
As o'er the grass they walk;
They're in twos upon the Campus in the Spring.

"Quotations"

- BRUERE.—"If I were an American, as I am an Englishman—"
THOMPSON.—"Though this may be play to you, 'tis death to us."
HERRICK.—"It was worse than a crime; it was a blunder."
BECHTEL.—"Like a man made after supper, with a cheese paring."
MOODY.—"Society is now one polished horde,
Formed of two mighty tribes, the Bores and Bored."
R. HARPER.—"I am the very pink of propriety."
SMALL.—"Still harping on my daughter."

The One Moment

WITH a sigh of satisfaction, Laura Atwood put out the gas, and turning away from her study table, where she had been cramming an indigestible mass of facts concerning "The Origin of Social Customs," for final "exam" the next day, she walked across the moon-lighted room, mounted to the window seat and looked out with sleepless eyes upon the wide Midway and the white boulevard, glimmering lakewards under the big June moon. She was thinking of the next day night when she was to speak the Freshman's toast at the reunion banquet of the club she had joined that Fall. It was more to her—that club—than all the rest of college. It was the criterion of her every action, of even her dress and the intonations of her voice. Everything she did was for the credit of the club rather than for the sake of any particular member, as was the case with her chum, Mary Pierce, who, having the same enthusiasm, owed it, however, to her adoration of Alice Boyd, the president. Even as these names flitted through her mind words from the next room struck her ear. It was Alice Boyd who spoke and her voice was nervous.

"O, don't go yet, I have something serious to say to you."

"But Laura next door," objected the other girl.

"Never mind her. Her light's out—probably been asleep for hours. She's a good Freshman and keeps respectable hours," the other said with a forced lightness. "Sit down, it may be long—you see—I—well—"

"My life here has been a sham. O, don't look so incredulous. You think me rich. I'm poor. I earned my expenses here teaching in the family of one of Maud's rich California friends. I never had the luxurious home I led you to suppose. The money I spent I earned writing for second rate magazines—footless stories, directions for making picture frames out of putty, pine cones and gilt paint—O, anything cheap and taudry."

Her voice stopped in a suppressed sob. Then the girl continued dispassionately.

"I haven't a penny or a prospect in this world, not an aristocratic connection, not even an honorable name by to-morrow. But it is the fault of your abominable system here. I came full of enthusiasm for college, content, good looking, and very capable. How could I help knowing it? I saw your clubs and the immense social prestige they gave. Of course I wanted it, too. But I was passed over for girls, giddy, well dressed, some of them not even well bred. It all seemed to me to be cruelly snobbish. First I wept bitterly over it, then—Well, one day in 'gym' Maud asked me where I was from, and glad of anybody's notice, I told her, California. Then she asked about the Thorntons, to impress me, I bitterly supposed. I said I knew them, and with her sudden ridiculous change of manner, the whole thing flashed across my thought. I told her all those intimate details one hears from children of a family and from servants' gossip. I suggested luxuries I never had. O, can't you see the whole miserable thing? With her notice of me came yours, then I joined you. I came to live, even to myself, in an artificial elegance to support my pretensions. I was more snobbish than you, for hadn't I been out of the 'charmed circle?' To-morrow night I shall tell them what a lie I've lived. It's the only justification I can make my conscience, and heaven knows I hope it will make you easier on other girls in the place I was once in. I am going away for good, so I shan't feel your scorn. But I can't get back to my old self. That's the tragedy of it."

There was a long pause. The girl in the window seat was motionless. She was thinking how to prevent that revelation. All of Mary Pierce's ideals hung on Alice Boyd's truth. There was the club's honor, too. Why didn't the other girl in that room interfere? At last she was breaking that ghastly silence.

"You can't do this thing, Alice. It's too late. You're hysterical. It really isn't so dreadful. Then think of—of—how frightful it would be for the club for that to get about. O Alice, you surely can't mean you've deceived me and the rest of us. You surely can't."

"Don't cry that way," Alice said, almost roughly. "You'll wake Laura. Go—I must—I have to clear my conscience. It's true, but don't take another girl this way. O do go home and let me be by myself."

The other girl did as she was told and, dazed, went to bed, for it was very late.

* * * *

The toastmistress had just finished her short introductory speech, and the girls all along the glistening dinner table turned toward the head where sat their president. She arose slowly, looked down across the candle-lighted faces of the girls in dainty evening dress, finally meeting the proud eyes of Mary Pierce at the other end of the table. She drew in her breath sharply, for she knew what her disclosure would mean to the girl, so she postponed it for a time, speaking brilliantly of the four years she had spent in the University. They were all listening intensely, enjoying every word, trying to remember the glittering epigram, witty characterization and happy reminiscences. Laura Atwood alone leaned back inattentive, in relief, because she thought that the last night's conversation had been a horrid dream. But suddenly her heart stopped at the sound of a new tone in Miss Boyd's voice, as she was saying :

"And now, dear girls, I have spoken enough of club and college. I feel forced by your kindness to throw myself on your mercy. I—I—I must make some confessions."

Laura saw the other girl stiffen with fear. She herself, from the first word had thought of nothing but how to stop Miss Boyd. She was presently on her feet, through some supernatural agency, it afterward seemed to her, her glass of water held high in her hand, her face flaming, her voice shrill with excitement.

"Yes! confessions—but I shall make them for you. You would confess how you have striven to make yourself first in college for your club; you, the last to claim return for it. You would confess how you have stood to every Freshman as an example of how excellently versatile a college woman here can be. Confess to the brightest career in college—to stealing all our hearts, and to winning easily every honor we can give you. Girls, all of you, here's to our president. She leaves us to-morrow. May her departure be as bright as her sojourn. May——"

They interrupted her wild speech with a wild response. But Alice Boyd, being a person of observation, divined that Miss Atwood was actuated by no mere excitement and she wondered if the girl knew and spoke in irony, or in a mad, successful effort to stop her disclosure. To confess now in the midst of the general hilarity would be impossible. The one moment for revelation had passed—and she was glad.

It Will Happen

One eve I met the Head of the hall,
A dame both bright and fair.
I didn't ask to see her at all—
I knew though, she was there.

Somehow I didn't expect that she Knew I was in just then,
So I nudged over and kissed Marie—
Just as the Head walked in.

Marie turned rouge; I turned away,
Expecting all the while
The Head some terrible thing would say—
But then I saw her smile.

Of course there was but one thing to do,
Outside of dropping dead.
So as I left I kissed her, too—
"Come back again," she said.

One eve I met the Head of the hall,
And she was bright and fair;
And now I never go in to call,
Unless I'm sure she's there.

The Freshman-Sophomore Football Game of 1901

ON Thursday, November 14th, 1901, a bit after two o'clock in the afternoon the teams representing, respectively, the Freshman and Sophomore classes of the University of Chicago, trotted through the wooden gates of Marshall Field and the annual embroglio was once more at hand. The day was unutterably chill and dreary, the wind ripping about the field as if to destroy the last spark of hope rampant in the Freshman breast. A half hundred, faithful Sophomores, brazen in their rights as upper classmen, planted themselves in the Chicago bleachers on the west, while the more modest Freshmen contented themselves along the side lines on the east. A half dozen nearly frozen, but enthusiastic girls, perched along the board seats of the bleachers, lent a tone of empressement to the contest.

As the teams scurried up and across the gridiron in pathetic attempts to beget a confidence sadly wanting in themselves and in their adherents, the air reverberated with the "Hulla Baree Bora Baror!" of the second year men, intermingled with an impromptu warble of the first year men, closing with a mighty "N-a-u-g-h-t-y F-i-v-e!" as a finale.

The Sophomores winning the toss, chose the north goal, thereby getting for themselves the advantage of the wind for the first half. Under the paternal direction of Phil Allen as referee—who vouchsafed as a truism the fact that, "there's nobody like a Freshman for losing his nerve quicker,"—the whistle screamed and the game was on. The brisk wind prevented the kick-off from going many yards and after a short return run the ball was downed on the Sophomore's thirty-five yard line. Before the Freshman youths had entirely recovered from the perturbation and mud of the initial scrimmage, the Naughty-four men lined up in a kick formation and in a twinkling the oval, propelled by wind and muscle, was sailing far down the field toward Anatomy, with a Freshman back "pikeing" after it as fast as his diminutive legs could pound the ground.

Then the young gentlemen who hope to graduate in Nineteen Hundred and Five had their fling at the game, but, after three ineffectual attempts to make the distance, decided they "didn't care for any," and again generously passed the ball into the waiting hands of their opponents. With a big Medic guard called back for interference, the Sophomores hammered the battle line of their opponents with straight and cross bucks, interspersed with an occasional tackle and end run, until, after nine minutes of play, the ball was pushed over for the first score.

The six girls shivered and drew closer together.

The next touchdown was a repetition of the first and the half closed uneventfully with the Sophomores triumphantly chanting, "One!—Two!—Three!"—up to ten, while the Freshmen played tag with each other in picturesque attempts to keep their feet warm.

In the second half, although the wind conditions were reversed, the Sophomores counted three more touchdowns and two goals to their tally, meanwhile magnanimously permitting the Freshmen to score five against them, thus giving them another five to use in their class yell.

And so the game of Nineteen Hundred and One was fought and finished, leaving the Sophomores insolently happy in their victory, the Freshmen too dazed to comprehend clearly, yet imbued already with enough Chicago spirit to mutter—"Wait till track!"

The six girls hung their heads dejectedly as they passed out into the street.

A Ballade of the Crook

(With Due Apology.)

Shrewdly I pick out my easy mark;
For luck to "Old Nick" I pray;
And since I'm smooth as the smoothest "shark",
For no small stakes I play.
I've been in the business till I've grown gray,
And my reputation's such
That all my victims will truly say,
At the end of my "spiel" I "touch".

I find my prey by light or dark;
My mood make pathetic or gay;
I ply my craft as beggar or spark,
By curb or 'neath woodland spray.
My manner is open as brightest day,
A candid air helps much;
When, in my genial, persuasive way,
At the end of my "spiel" I "touch".

Each dog, they say, has its day to bark,
And man is but transformed clay;
So why, pray, shouldn't I have my lark,
And graft things while I may?
Then, when at last I'm brought to bay
Like a bunny in his hutch,
Still true to my motto you'll hear me say,
At the end of my "spiel" I "touch".

L'Envoi.

Pal Death, as I come beneath your sway,
And feel at my throat your clutch,
Then yours the pocket—the last for aye,
At the end of my "spiel" I "touch".

Officially Reconsidered

TERRIL was usually a very conscientious post-office inspector, fond of work and shirking no duty. But this morning he almost wished he were out of the service.

He had just found on his desk an order to leave Washington by the ten o'clock train for Battletown, a southern village, where there was trouble about a negro postmaster. Terril was very much in love with a girl just at the time, and had meant to tell her that evening. As Miss Deane was a visitor in Washington, he feared she might be gone before his return. Now, it is unwise for a post-office inspector to have personal interests, for he is expected to have none but the government's own. So as Terril had no "impersonal" reason to give his superior officer, he was obliged to take case number 2,552 C. Accordingly, he contented himself with writing a lengthy and rather marked note to Miss Deane, and ordering a box of violets to be sent with it. Then he took the train for Battletown, and here he was the next day, in no patient mood with the obstreperous southern hot-heads. He was greeted with the babel of many voices.

"We've driven that blamed nigger out of the State." "The assistant's in charge now." "The nigger's afraid to come back." "What are you going to do about it?" The excited men hurled their words at Terril, who stood unmoved.

"One moment, gentlemen," he said quietly, "I can't listen to you all at once, besides, there are too many young faces here. Suppose some of you older men come with me into the next room, where we can discuss this question calmly, and—'smiling'—with less noise."

"That's reasonable," said young John, and forthwith old John Sylvester and four other fathers in the community retired with the inspector to convince him that there was but one thing to do—to appoint a white man in the negro's place.

"What is there against the black man's character?" asked Terril.

"We don't concern ourselves with the characters of niggers," answered Sylvester, majestically. "Jones is a nigger, and that in itself is enough against him."

Terril, who saw that he might as well have heard the younger men, said but little until he had listened to the whole story. When he returned to the main room and noted the determined faces before him, he made his decision promptly, for Terril was in a hurry to get back to Washington.

"Gentlemen," he said, "this matter can't be decided at once. I must explain the situation at headquarters. In the meantime, my instructions are to remove your post-office to the county seat." There was a look of dismay on his hearer's faces.

"But we will have to go eight miles for our mail," said one man. "How long will it be before we have our own office back," asked another.

"Oh, it may not take long to decide," said Terril, equivocally.

Before they had got through talking about the matter he had gathered up the money-orders, stamps, and other government property, dismissed the assistant, and was on his way to the county seat. There, at the post-office, he deposited the effects with the necessary instructions, and telegraphed the railway service not to put off any mail at Battletown. Then Terril fretted and fumed at the ten-hour wait until he could take the train to Washington.

On the way there he drafted his report of the case, and wound up with: "In view of the foregoing facts and circumstances, I have the honor to recommend that the post-office at Battletown be discontinued for an indefinite period, dependent upon the behavior of the citizens of the town."

When Terril reached his hotel after a three days' absence from Washington, he found a letter, the handwriting of which made his heart beat faster. His face was a study as he read:

"MY DEAR MR. TERRIL:

"I left Washington unexpectedly the same day you did, though by the afternoon train. Did I never tell you that I lived in Battletown? When I reached home just fancy my surprise when I heard that you had been here, gone away, and taken our post-office with you. How could you be so cruel?

"I was very indignant with you, especially so this morning, because I had to drive eight miles for my mail. But just now, when I was handed your violets, which my hostess sent after me, my indignation cooled perceptibly, and now I wish to tell you how much I appreciate your kindness.

"In your note you suggest that I write you an occasional letter from my southern home. Under ordinary circumstances I should be pleased to do so, but consider!—I am writing this eight miles from home for the sake of convenience, and must come as far for an answer.

"Cousin John Sylvester says this state of affairs may not last long. So give us a nice white postmaster, Mr. Terril, and then I shall send you the prettiest note of thanks I can write.

Cordially yours,

GRACE DEAN."

First Terril laughed, then Terril frowned, then Terril thought hard and tore up the carefully composed report. He re-wrote it quite as carefully, and wound up with: "In view of the foregoing facts and circumstances, I have the honor to recommend that the present incumbent be removed and a white man be appointed in his stead."

"After all," he said to himself apologetically, "it is far the better way."

PATRICK HENRY

Patrick, or "Pat," Henry was born in Virginia in 1736 of poor but Irish parents. His early youth was spent in getting married, which he did at the age of eighteen. After his marriage came the Revolutionary War. It was during this strife that he broke the world's record for the distance between Bunker Hill and Boston; time: 10 minutes, flat. Second and third places in this race were taken by athletes from His Majesty's Second Light Infantry Regiment. At the urgent request of Professor Clark he wrote a piece for the Practical Public Speaking Book, which has since become very well known. It is entitled "Give Me Liberty or Give Me Death." Careful research has developed the fact that the title was inspired by complications which arose soon after his marriage. It is believed that he is dead. Rumor states that he was murdered last winter in Kent by a number of Freshmen under the direction of Mr. Gorsuch.

PRESIDENT HARPER

WILLIAM RAINEY HARPER (or make it—Izzit Raining Harper?) was from his early youth noted for his precocity as a scholar. When only two years of age he is said to have completely devoured the paint on a fine red edition of Homer's Iliad (Student's Series of Classics) and at the age of fourteen he graduated from Muskingum College. After that he spent most of his time in conducting Harper's Bazaar, an educational institution in the west which is also called the University of Chicago. Since 1893 he has been manager and joint proprietor of The Harper & Haskell Oriental Museum, which is called oriental because it is east of Cobb Hall. His most important literary work was done in collaboration with two other men, Professor Tolman and C. Julius Caesar. The title of the book is "Commentarii de Bello Gallici." It is an exciting historical novel in the Latin language, which is eagerly read by prep-school students. Some people call him "Famous;" others know him by his name.

DEAN SMITH

DEAN SMITH is one of the famous Smith Brothers, who invented the cough drop. He is a scion of the famous house of Smith by a marriage into the house of Jones. His skill in handling dangerous compounds in the chemical laboratory has caused him to be given the job of Assistant Dean of the Junior Colleges. Dean Smith is known as the "Dancing Dean," his agility on the ball room floor is excelled only by that of "Fighting Phil. Allen," who can get clear around the hall three times while the Dean does two laps. The Dean's Scotch accent has never fully regained its former strength since his dancing feats, and several of his oldest and best funny stories have been so seriously damaged that it has been impossible to use them of late.

PROFESSOR STARR

Professor Frederick Starr, the author of the well known chant "The Medicine Man" is an Onandega-Iroquois Indian half-breed. He has been adopted twice and amended once but is still constitutionally strong. Once when he had his war paint on a Freshman addressed him with the antique joke, saying that he thought he ought to be able to Starr in an Anthropological course. The Freshman has not been seen since. Some say he went to Stetson and we hope it was no worse, but it was noticed that Professor Starr did not eat his meals for the next three days. That's about as long as an ordinary sized Freshman could be expected to last. At a great expense the University of Chicago keeps Professor Starr caged up during about six months of the year and he may be seen almost any day in the Unclassified Section of Walker Museum.

PROFESSOR THOMPSON

Charlemagne.

James Windfall Thompson was born in the history library about 50 A. U. C. and may be found there at the present time. He was a great friend of Charlemagne and they used to do a great many "stunts" together. On one occasion Charlemagne came into the palace and informed Professor Thompson that he had just jumped over three horses without touching any of them. James was nonplussed for a moment but soon went out and returned in about an hour and said that he had just examined one hundred and fifty Freshmen without passing any of them. Charlemagne had to admit that he was stumped and it is believed that it was as the result of this blow that the empire went to pieces so rapidly immediately after.

Professor Thompson is popularly supposed to have been the inventor of that justly celebrated guessing game called "History One." His motto is "Spare the quiz and spoil the Freshman."

"Three horses
yes sir!

A. A. STAGG

A. A. Stagg is a great social entertainer, he being the host at all those "stag" parties, notices of which are used to fill the society column of the Weekly during the dull season. It has been suggested that the two first initials of his name signify "Amiable Alligator," this supposition being carried out by the fact that for the last two years he has been continually on the lookout for "meat." He spends a great deal of his time on the gridiron, making it hot for the football candidates. The greatest service which he has done for the University is keeping Kelly at trying to run two miles and thus using up energy which otherwise might be harmfully exerted. He is sometimes called "The Old Man of the C."

DR. JAMES HAMILTON BOYD

DR. BOYD is the reformed captain of a daring gang of pirates that used to infest the Mediterranean. He left that organization to join the Beta Theta Pi Fraternity. Once when he stood on the bridge of his ship at midnight trying to figure out the logarithm of the angle of elevation of the Big Dipper, a captive was brought before him who claimed to be a freshman at college. In a gruff shout, Captain Boyd asked, "If you multiply a quarter-deck by four, what do you have?" The freshman hesitated a moment and then answered, "A full house." Captain Boyd scowled and thundered, "Wrong! Take him away men. Put him in irons, and unless he can square himself in twenty-four hours give him a condition and feed him to the mathematical sharks in improper fractions." Since his retirement from the high seas he has earned his living from higher mathematics (about four stories higher) and has written a volume of confessions of his criminal past, entitled "Boyd's College Algebra; or Brain Fever in Ten Easy Lessons."

A Winter Garden

Along my path there bloom, though Summer's gone,
The Winter's blossoms—airy seed pods brown,
That dance and sway against my dress as on
I pass, the thistle and the aster's crown
Of radiant points, the grasses with their spears
Poised quaintly in defense of hidden hoard
Of winged or tufted seeds, wild oats, Job's tears,
And slender slanting milkweed pods, whence soared
The silken harvest.

Close the petals round
The magic treasure, till in hazy Spring
The fresh wind, with the softly swishing sound
Of rain across the grass will freely fling
The hoarded largess to the moist, dark mould,
Whence thanks will rise in blossoms manifold.

The Awakening

FARREL was ripe for a shock from without. He had developed himself without any help from other people and his point of view wasn't worth mentioning. He looked at the world as one looks at a mirror expecting to see there reflected only his own frowns and smiles and his own peculiar grimaces. He had not learned that our friends are those of our acquaintances whose superiority we have admitted or whose inferiority we have demonstrated; and he met everyone frankly and trustingly as if the world lacked only an opportunity to be friendly, but he had always been so unobtrusive that no one had, up to his junior year, felt impelled to waken him from this suave dream.

Then, by chance, he met Miss Fisher. She saw that he differed from the rest of the men about college, decided that he would be an improving experience, but, as she did not understand his nature at first, she handled him somewhat more carefully than she did the rest of her male acquaintances, and waited for a clue to his character.

They built their friendship in the way approved by college tradition. Talks during the moments immediately before class led to talks in the halls; walks across the campus led to walks to the lake; and throughout all this progression Farrel retained his intense earnestness and the conviction that she was a serious-minded girl intent only upon doing something worth doing in the work of the English department. She succeeded in being always in his moods and contrived to say a number of things which he thought worth setting down in a queer sort of journal which he kept. For this last trait he liked her most because the journal was ordinarily very dry reading as he never advanced beyond the easiest platitudes himself and his acquaintances saved their epigrams for people more ostentatiously appreciative.

One day toward the end of the spring quarter Mr. Damon read an exceptionally brilliant theme on Kosciusko. It was an earnest, forceful bit of writing, and his auditors did not need Mr. Damon's words of praise to bring them to a unanimous feeling that this was the best piece of work the course had brought out.

As the class filed out Miss Fisher who was waiting at the door, greeted Farrel with, "You are beyond doubt going to be a great man some day; your theme has made the hit of the quarter."

"The Kosciusko theme? I can't claim it, I'm sorry to say."

She looked at him reproachfully. "Now, Mr. Farrel, please let me admire you. Do admit that it's yours so that I can speak the little eulogy I have prepared."

He was silent for a moment, then he said quietly "I didn't do it."

She failed to observe his wretched confused look and continued archly, "Well, at any rate you can see what I expect from you. I was sure that the theme was yours and if it was not I am sure you could write a better one."

He listened with a weary air and leaned dejectedly against the theme-box behind him. He was thinking of a hundred other things that she had said to him--things that he saw now in a new light. She had told him that she found him interesting, original, better worth knowing than the men who danced and flattered, valuable as a friend and improving as a companion. So skillfully had she said all these things that he had accepted them without realizing that they had been said; and now they all came back and stood, under the new garish light, in a row beside the palpable flattery she had just spoken. The whole row looked pitifully cheap and crude. This realization was the shock for which Farrel was ripe. He was facing a real crisis, one which called for a sweeping readjustment of his ideas and a decided change in his point of view. A new foe to his peace of mind was upon him and he had no force or strategem with which to meet it.

She broke in upon his bitter thoughts, "You don't receive these things I am saying very tactfully."

"Nor do you say them tactfully," he answered, flushing, "if tact implies an effort to spare the feelings of others. Don't you know what you have done by this 'jolly'? Yes, this is 'jolly.'" He repeated the word with emphasis as she attempted to interrupt him. "Don't you know that you have made it impossible for us to be really good friends? If I believe an encouraging word that you say to me I shall be tortured by the fear that you are guying me. If I don't believe you I can only have a contempt for you. Why couldn't you let matters be as they were in the beginning? If you don't care, I do and I can't believe that I don't deserve any more kindness from you than this. I have never been insincere with you and I would have been content with ugly truths from you. I suppose the manly thing to do is to reply to you in kind instead of complaining, but I haven't the heart for it. I would rather not talk to you."

"But, Mr. Farrel," she broke in, "I was sincere when I spoke of the theme."

"According to the principles of 'jollyng,' to assume an aggrieved air and claim sincerity is a sort of first aid to the injured. You are a lady and must not be disputed. To you at least I must seem to believe you and thereby become in your eyes, a chump. There are only two ways to avoid the feeling that you are being made a fool of—one is to withdraw from the society of 'jolliers;' the other is——."

"Well?"

"To be a fool."

"Do you mean to attempt to escape, Mr. Farrel?"

"I must for the sake of my self-respect; but," he was pleading now, "I wish you would try to think of a third way for me."

He had gone too far. She turned to go. "You have mentioned two very pretty alternatives. If you haven't already chosen the latter you would do well to try the former."

What will I do for you,
Freshmen, my freshmen?
What is there I will not do,
Freshmen, my own?
For four long years I'll grind you,
Cuff and coddle, teach and blind you,
Till your sins are left behind you,
Till you're tried and found fitted to go again,
Freshmen,
Well worthy the name of Chicago men.

What word do I give to you,
Freshmen, my freshmen?
To what pact do I bind you,
Freshmen, my own?
'Tis hold the truth most dear,
Be bringers of good cheer,
Gentlemen without fear;
'Tis play the game till the death of you,
Freshmen,
'Tis fight till the last breath of you.

What task do I set for you,
Freshmen, my freshmen?
What charge do I leave to you,
Freshmen, my own?
I give into your hands
With iron-strict commands
A charter to new lands,
Guard it well, keep it sacred, the crowd of you,
Freshmen,
Till Chicago, your Mother, is proud of you.

A Remonstrance

I whispered a tale into each of those flowers
Ere I sent them to you, my dear;
And have you kept the sweet secrets, love,
That they murmured into your ear?

Those tender confessions so delicate were
That a masculine hand could profane
In but touching the flower, all the burden it bore,
And you sportively caused me this pain.

A flower is a trifle to drop from your hand,
But dare you as lightly destroy
The pledge of a love that I cherish untold,
For the thanks of a thoughtless boy?

Hero Worship

THE dance was over and she stood watching the carriages drive up before the door, waiting with a listless expectancy for her own. Most of the guests of the hotel had gone, so that she was rather surprised to see a small boy leaning against an adjacent window impatiently kicking his heels against the paneling while he anxiously scanned the faces of the groups of people pacing the hall, or wearily swaying in the double rocking chairs. The door flew open, and borne in on the rush of cold air came a man's voice:

"Come on, Sheldon, your cab's come!"

She felt an impatient tugging at her gown and turned on the small boy, whose eyes followed the Captain's sturdy figure out of the hall with that deep admiration accorded by a boy's soul to a successful athlete.

"Say, is that him? Is that — Jimmie?" he whispered.

Reassured by her nod, he ran to the window again, flattening his little nose against the pane until the Captain's carriage had disappeared. Then with a sigh of deep satisfaction, he reluctantly turned away, drawing between yawns:

"They said Jimmie'd be here, so I jes' had to stay up an' see him. Ain't he a dandy, though?"

Ballade of Old Programs

Whene'er an hour I wish to fleet
In idleness with memories gay,—
I seek that haunt of visions sweet,—
The box in which my dance cards stay.
These names—my thoughts to dreamland stray,
And soon my fancy, all aglow,
Recalls them in their fair array,
The college girls of long ago.

I yield me to my dream's deceit,
While Krell and Goldsmith softly play;
I guide again their twinkling feet
Through all the Proms of yesterday.
Under the music's subtle sway
I feel again, forgetting woe,
The old charm of their winning way,—
The college girls of long ago.

My old time loves again I meet,—
Ephemeral idols, built of clay;
And just to make my dream complete
Those carriage bills again I pay.
Ah, Madge and Cora, laughing May,
To dance with you—could you once know
Just what it cost, 'twould turn you gray,—
You college girls of long ago.

ENVOY

Ah, would that I could sit alway
Without a care, a dreaming so,—
But the spell passes swift,—where now are they,
The college girls of long ago?

The Modern Table of the Man who went to College to get a Literary Finish

ONCE upon a Time there was a Man who thought he had struck a Gait in Literature which would please the Popular Fancy. He had written several Lurid Stories for the Waterville Times, the weekly Organ of Waterville, Ia., which his Friends had declared were Masterpieces. They said that he had Rudyard Kipling looking like an Amateur. He didn't believe that Anybody could show Him Much about the Art of converting Ink into Literature, but he decided to go to College in order to put on the Finishing Touches. Someone told him that All the Real Literary People took a Course under a Man who wrote one Pessimistic Novel per year, so he joined the Procession and registered for English 5, prepared to dazzle the "Prof."

For the first Theme he handed in a Little Thing which he thought was about the best in its Line since "Hamlet." The English Department remained unshaken. He kept on handing in Gems of Literature at the Rate of about Six per Week. Then he began to run out of Ideas and lost Track of the Number of his Theme. He began to feel like a Long Distance Runner at the end of a Two Mile Heat; he saw green Things in Front of his Eyes. Once he dreamed that he was dead and kept on handing in Themes to a Devil who told him to write Another as fast as One came in.

At last It came; One of his Themes was read in Class. When it had been read the "Prof." looked up with a Smile and said, "Well?" Then a girl over in the Corner who always talked of the Bois in Paris and the Some-kind-of-Garten in Germany in just the same Way in which we mention Englewood, took a Deep Breath and began to jump on It. When she got through, the Rest of Them took Turns and jammed the Literary Gem to an Unrecognizable Pulp. When the Literary Person got through blushing with Shame at having written such an abominable Piece of Trash he heard the Lady next to him, who always wore a Raglan to Class, say to her Neighbor, "Of Course these poorer Themes are the work of Persons who are only Eligible for Course Four and who will not be allowed to register for Course Six."

Rondeau:—Seniors

Our senior year is near its close,
And Convocations will depose
The dynasty of Noughty Two;
A few months more—our merry crew
Will vanish like the winter's snows.

We'll scatter to each wind that blows,
And with us all remembrance goes,
Of clever stunts we used to do,
Our senior year.

Old man, since Fate we can't oppose;
Since Time and Fame were ever foes,
Cheer up—we'll not forget, we two,
That steadfast friendship tried and true
Which shared alike our joys and woes,
Our senior year.

At Luncheon in the Dormitory

FIRST I gaze disapprovingly at her hair. It is yellow, and I am sure that she erects her pompadour upon a hard roll. I dislike her mouth, which, by the way, is now opening in speech.

How I abhor her voice! It is guttural. She omits some of her final consonants and slurs her words together. If she would only cease speaking! But she will not, and I savagely decide that her shirtwaist is in execrable taste, her belt impossible.

My painfully acquired love for humanity refuses to float about this foreign substance. I will make her an exception. Would it were possible for me to cause her a little mental discomfort! If she will be silent—of which there seems to be little hope—I will try.

In the Silent Hours

When the bells ring in Cobb at midnight
Do they summon to some strange class;
And whose are the noiseless footsteps
That through the dark corridors pass;
And who gives the silent lecture
From the chair in yon dim-lighted room;
Is it Time or Death or grim Minos
That reads from the book of Doom?
Aye, who rustles into that chamber
Above which the transom leers?
"Speak! are ye the souls of the parted,
Or the heirs of the coming years?"
No answer; the challenge is futile;
But, ay when the hour bell rings,
I know They are hurrying past me;
Their presence about me clings.

A Summer Tragedy

It was in the Summer Quarter, when most of the "regulars" had flown to other fields, and their places had been taken by the usual number of school ma'ns, among whom there shone out here and there a "co-ed" of unusual brilliancy. There was one in particular, who attracted everyone's attention. Perhaps it was her gowns, or her apparent bashfulness, or maybe her charming southern accent, that was the source of her magnetic influence. At first she seemed quite alone at the "Varsity" for no one knew who she was nor whence she came. She was taking, among other things, a course in English composition—English 3; it was under Professor—well, never mind—it was under Professor Somebody, and as he frequently made flippant remarks about "her style" and "her mannerisms" it was quite natural that he should speak to her when he met her in the halls or on the campus. That was the beginning of the end. The wheels of Fate grind as remorselessly now as they did when Helen was stolen from Menelaus. It was a woman who caused the downfall of Troy and Dewey too; and it was a woman who caused the downfall of Professor Somebody. He was one of those young men upon whom Fortune smiles. After he had rented his cap and gown and taken his sheepskin, "Prexy" had decided that he was too young to be thrust out into the cold world; so he hired him and turned him loose upon the Freshmen and the unsuspecting summer students. He had maintained his dignity, however, even in spite of his youthfulness, up to the time of which I write.

It was surprising to see how often he casually met her in her afternoon walks when she was working off "gym credits," and it was still more surprising to see how much "gym work" she did. It came to be quite a familiar sight to see them in the early evening strolling down the Midway toward Jackson Park and the lake, or in the other direction, toward Washington Park and Sans Souci. But, alas, things were not to continue indefinitely thus, for we are told that Pleasure and Pain tend to equalize each other, and when a young man gets "up in the air," be he student or instructor, he will surely fall again.

I can see him now as he came to class that fatal morning, entirely unaware of the terrible punishment about to be meted out to him. His little eyeglasses and sandy beard gave evidence of his having been recently abroad. You know when a man goes abroad he always brings back some peculiarity. He mounted the stairs, entered the class room and took his seat. Then he gathered up the newly written themes and looked them over. He picked out one and began to read it to the class. When he finished he called for criticisms. He picked out another and did the same; and then another. Finally, near the end of the hour he picked out the fatal paper. It looked interesting and he began to read it to the class. It dealt with the attractions which the University offered to summer students. It described the beautiful campus, the Midway, Jackson Park, and the Lake. It told about Washington Park and Sans Souci, about the charming students and still more charming instructors. As he read, he became amused. When he came to the "charming instructors" he became anxious and began to read rapidly. Finally it began to deal with instructors in particular. It mentioned a young history instructor and he heaved a sigh of relief, thinking the danger was past. Then it mentioned a young Latin instructor who had set the girls all wild. As he read, he became confident and even smiled. But, alas, he was not yet through and the bell did not ring. He began to read about a young English instructor who was fond of the Midway and the Jackson Park Lagoon. He turned pale as he read, and looked at his watch. He wished the bell would ring. It told about evening walks and boat-rides. Oh! if he could only stop. But Fate was cruel and ere the bell rang he had about finished the long character sketch. He hurriedly gathered up the themes and left, resolving that he would never again read themes to the class before he had first read them to himself.

An Old Letter

This breath of reminiscence is the odor of a censor

That is swung before the altar of a friendship of the past,
And it lifts my spirit higher, for I love that friend, and loving

I can feel there's something sacred here, and worship too, at last.

Since the New Head Came to Snell

The Head is too much with us; late and soon,
In work and study we lay waste our powers:
Little is left in this lorn Snell of ours;
He took our spades and hearts, a priceless boon!
No more the reveler sees a double moon;
Those men who would be howling at all hours,
And throwing water in skin-drenching showers;
For these, for everything, he is out of tune;
No joy is ours. Great Scott! What recompense?
The bottles cease adown the hall to soar;
High living and plain thinking are no more:
The homely beauty of the "hot-hand" cause
Is gone; our peace, our fearless innocence,
And perfect freedom without household laws.

The Lady of the Deep Emotions

MY first impression was that she was suffering from a very bad stiff neck, but on second thought I decided that someone had told her that she looked like a Gibson girl. She held her chin and eyebrows very high; the muscles in the side of her neck looked strained, and the skin was drawn tight over her thin jaw. In her clothes she cultivated drooping lines—a black veil draped over her hat, and a long, loose black coat. Her hair was the only thing about her which was not taut with intensity—she did it on the lower edge of her collar with two hairpins. Her eyes looked wan and burnt-out with imaginary passion; her mouth seemed still passive from a kiss, or as if it had not quite recovered from a bee sting on the lower lip. Even in chapel or a political economy lecture her face never lost its conscious look of yearning. If you can imagine the Blessed Damozel as a cartoon in Judge, you will recognize the Lady of the Deep Emotions when you pass her in the halls of Cobb.

The Visitor

ON the first morning of the second six weeks, Mr. Bluff slouched into the recitation room as usual. A strange young woman was occupying his place, so he took the one next to her.

"Read the lesson over?" he said to the blue-eyed girl on the other side of the stranger.
"Of course not," she answered.

"Talk about your snap courses—gee!" continued Mr. Bluff as he slammed his books down on the desk.

Just then the Professor called on some one to translate. As it neared Mr. Bluff's turn to recite, he began zealously to look up words in the vocabulary and notes in the back of the book. It was the blue-eyed girl's turn.

"I am not going to read," whispered the stranger to Mr. Bluff.

"Oh, go ahead. What's the difference if you don't know the lesson? Make a bluff at it anyhow. He's easy."

"Is he?" asked the stranger with a smile that made her pretty face look more than pleasant.

"Who's the pretty girl?" enquired Mr. Bluff of the blue-eyed girl as they walked down stairs after class.

"The one you struck up a flirtation with?" said the girl; and her blue eyes twinkled.
"She's the Prof.'s wife."

A Serenade

Come, ramble with me, fair Titania,
In the shadowy ways of the night;
While fays with faint choruses charm us,
And glow-worms shed round us their light.

There let my deft fingers entice thee,
Caressing the silver strings,
To lay thy fair head on my bosom
And list to the song my heart sings.

'Tis a song my lips never could utter,
But my heart knows no silencing shame;
It carols forever, Titania,
And speeds my life blood with your name.

A Sudden Change

They were walking slowly towards the women's dorms from Cobb. The pretty Freshman was confiding her many Freshman troubles to the wise Sophomore at her side.

"Why don't you go to the Dean about it?" was his upper classmanly advice; for he preferred other subjects for conversation.

"To the Dean! I've been there half a dozen times and still the matter is not settled. I am going to change Deans."

"What Dean do you prefer?"

"Well, I think Dean Swift is mighty cute. I'd be happy if I could get him."
But the Sophomore only gave a low whistle.

To Night

Deep darkness, come!
Come blessed night!
And shield me from
Day's glaring light.

I long to lave my wearied eyes
In the cool deep of evening skies.
I long to feel mild astral beams
Wreathe round my brow their balmy dreams.

Last night, as I moaned in passionate wise,
The stars soft murmured: "Still thy sighs:
We were like thee; and thou shalt be
Like us who shed tranquility."

Forthwith sweet peace becalmed my mind;
No more I faltered as one blind.
Bravely I faced my destiny:
I knew 'twas but—tranquility.

Then let me steep
My longing sight
In thy deep deep—
Ah, soon--blest night!

AT all seasons the Colorado mountains are attractive. The air is crisp, the sunshine is brilliant and the coloring changes with every mood of nature.

The Colorado Midland Ry.

By reason of its unique location gives the traveler grander views of peak, canyon and snowy ranges than any other line.

A FAST and convenient service of chair cars, tourist and standard Pullman sleepers, from Denver and Chicago to the Pacific Coast, via Great Salt Lake.

Ample stopovers on through tickets given at the many charming Colorado resorts.

We Will Gladly Send You Our Attractive Literature
